GOLD. n. s. [ȝold, Saxon; golud, riches, Welsh. It is called gold in our English tongue, either of geel, as Scaliger says, which is in Dutch to shine; or of another Dutch word, which is gelten, and signifies in Latin valere, in English to be of price or value: hence cometh their ordinary word gelt, for money. Peacham on Drawing.]
1. Gold is the heaviest, the most dense, the most simple, the most ductile, and most fixed of all bodies, not to be injured either by air or fire, and seeming incorruptible. It is soluble by means of sea-salt; but is injured by no other salt. Gold is frequently found native, and very rarely in a state of ore. Pure Gold is so fixed, that Boerhaave informs us of an ounce of it set in the eye of a glass furnace for two months, without losing a single grain. Hill on Fossils.
Gold hath these natures: greatness of weight, closeness of parts, fixation, pliantness or softness, immunity from rust, and the colour or tincture of yellow. Bacon's Natural History.
Ah! Buckingham, now do I ply the touch,
To try if thou be current gold indeed. Shakesp.
We readily say this is a gold, and that a silver goblet, only by the different figures and colours represented to the eye by the pencil. Locke.
The gold fraught vessel which mad tempests beat,
He sees now vainly make to his retreat. Dryden.
2. Money.
For me, the gold of France did not seduce,
Although I did admit it as a motive
The sooner to effect what I intended. Shakesp.
Thou that so stoutly had resisted me,
Give me thy gold, if thou hast any gold;
For I have bought it with an hundred blows. Shak.
3. It is used for any thing pleasing or valuable. So among the ancients χρυσῆ ἀφροδίτη; and animamque morosque aureos educit in astra. Horace.
The king's a bawcock, and a heart of gold,
A lad of life, an imp of fame. Shakesp. Henry V.

Whatever beauties it may want, 'tis free at least from the grossness of those faults I mentioned. Dryd.

What a grossness is there in the mind of that man, who thinks to reach a lady's heart by wounding her ears! Clarissa.

GROT. n. s. [grotte, French; grotta, Italian.] A cave; a cavern for coolness and pleasure.

In the remotest wood and lonely grot,
Certain to meet that worst of evils, thought. Prior.

Awful to see the Ægerian grot. Pope.

GROTE'SQUE adj. [grotesque, French; grottesco, Italian.] Distorted of figure; unnatural; wildly formed.

The champaign head
Of a steep wilderness, whose hairy sides
With thicket overgrown, grotesque and wild,
Access denied Milton's Paradise Lost.

There is yet a lower sort of poetry and painting, which is out of nature; for a farce is that in poetry which grotesque is in a picture: the persons and actions of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners talk, that is, inconsisting with the characters of mankind: grotesque painting is the just resemblance of this. Dryden.

An hideous figure of them foes they drew,
Nor lines, nor looks, nor shades, nor colours true,
And this grotesque design expos'd to publick view.
Dryden.

Palladian walls, Venetian doors,
Grotesco roofs, and stucco floors. Pope.

GRO'TTO. n. s. [grotte, French; grotta, Italian.] A cavern or cave made for coolness. It is not used properly of a dark horrid cavern.

Their careless chiefs to the cool grottoes run,
The bow'rs of kings, to shade them from the sun.
Dryden.

This was found at the entry of the grotto in the Peak. Woodward.

GROVE. n. s. [from grave.] A walk covered by trees meeting above.

I look'd toward Birnam, and anon methought
The wood began to move:

Within

Within this three mile you may see it coming;
I say, a moving grove. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Fortunate fields, and groves, and flow'ry vales;
Thrice happy isles! Milton.
She left the flow'ry field, and waving grove.
Blackmore.
Banish'd from courts and love,
Abandon'd truth seeks shelter in the grove. Granville.
Can fierce passions vex his breast,
While every gale is peace, and every grove
Is melody? Thomson's Spring.

To GRO'VEL. v. n. [grufde, Islandick, flat on the face. It may perhaps come by gradual corruption from ground fell.]

1. To lie prone; to creep low on the ground.
The steel-head passage wrought,
And through his shoulder pierc'd; wherewith to ground
He groveling fell, all gored in his gushing wound.
Spenser.
What see'st thou there? king Henry's diadem,
Inchas'd with all the honours of the world!
If so, gaze on, and grovel on thy face,
Until thy head be circled with the same. Shakesp.
Oke mast and beech, and cornell fruit they eate,
Groveling like swine on earth, in lowlest sort,
Chapman.
Now they lie
Groveling and prostrate on yon lake of fire. Milton.
Upon thy belly groveling thou shalt go. Milton.
Let us then conclude that all painters ought to require this part of excellence: not to do it, is to want courage, and not dare to shew themselves: 'tis to creep and grovel on the ground. Dryden.

2. To be mean; to be without dignity or elevation.
I must disclaim whate'er he can express;
His groveling sense will shew my passion less. Dryden.
Several thoughts may be natural which are low and groveling. Addison's Spectator.

GROUND. n. s. [grund, Saxon; grondt, Danish.]

1. The earth, considered as superficially extended, and therefore related to tillage, travel, habitation, or almost any action. The main mass of terrene matter is never called the ground. We never distinguish the terraqueous globe into ground and water, but into earth, or land, and water; again, we never say under earth but under ground.
Israel shall go on dry ground through the sea.
Ex. xiv. 16.
Man to till the ground
None was, and from the earth a dewy mist
Went up, and water'd all the ground. Milton.
From the other hill
To their fix'd station, all in bright array,
The cherubim descended, on the ground
Gliding meteorous. Milton.
A black bituminous gurge
Boils up from under ground. Milton.
And yet so nimbly he would bound,
As if he scorn'd to touch the ground. Hudibras.

2. The earth as distinguished from air or water.

They have all the same pastoral guides appointed, authorised, sanctified, and set apart by the appointment of God by the direction of the spirit, to direct and lead the people of God in the same way of eternal salvation. Pearson.
3. Director; regulator.
Who the guide of nature, but only the God of nature? In him we live, move, and are. Those things which nature is said to do, are by divine art performed, using nature as an instrument: nor is there any such knowledge divine in nature herself working, but in the guide of nature's work. Hooker
Some truths are not by reason to be tried,
But we have sure experience for our guide. Dryden.

GUI'DELESS. adj. [from guide.] Having no guide; wanting a governour or superintendant.
Th' ambitious Swede, like restless billows tost,
Though in his life he blood and ruin breath'd,
To his now guideless kingdom peace bequeath'd. Dryden.
There fierce winds o'er dusky valleys blow,
Whose every puff bears empty shades away,
Which guideless in those dark dominions stray. Dryden.

GUI'DER. n. s. [from guide.] Director; regulator; guide. Obsolete.
Our guider come! to the Roman camp conduct us. Shakesp.
That person, that being provoked by excessive pain, thrust his dagger into his body, and thereby, instead of reaching his vitals, opened an imposthume, the unknown cause of all his pain, and so stabbed himself into perfect health and ease, surely had great reason to acknowledge chance for his chirurgeon, and Providence for the guider of his hand. South.

GUI'DON. n. s. [French.] A standard-bearer; a standard. Obsolete.

GUILD. n. s. [ȝilopiȝ, Saxon, a fellowship, a corporation.] A society; a corporation; a fraternity or company, combined together by orders and laws made among themselves by their prince's licence. Hence the common word gild or guildhall proceeds, being a fraternity or commonalty of men gathered into one combination, supporting their common charge by mutual contribution. Cowel.
Towards three or four o'clock
Look for the news that the guild hall affords. Shakesp. Rich. III.
In woollen cloth it appears, by those ancient guilds that were settled in England for this manufacture, that this kingdom greatly flourished in that art. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
As when the long-ear'd milky mothers wait
At some sick miser's crowded gate,
For their defrauded absent foals they make
A moan so loud, that all the guild awake. Pope.

GUILE. n. s. [guille, gille old French, the same with wile.] Deceitful cunning; insidious artifice; mischievous subtilty.

With fawning words he courted her awhile,
And looking lovely, and oft ſighing ſore,
Her conſtant heart did court with divers guile;
But words and looks, and ſighs ſhe did abhor.
Spenſer.

When I have moſt need to employ a friend,
Deep, hollow, treacherous, and full of guile,
Be he to me! This do I beg of heav'n,
When I am cold in zeal to you or yours. Shakeſp.

We may, with more ſucceſsful hope reſolve
To wage by force or guile eternal war. Milton.

Nor thou his malice and falſe guile contemn:
Subtile he needs muſt be who could ſeduce
Angels. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

GUI'LEFUL. adj. [guile and full.]

1. Wily; inſidious; miſchievouſly artful.

The way not to be inveigled by them that are ſo guileful through ſkill, is thoroughly to be inſtructed in that which maketh ſkilful againſt guile. Hooker.

Without expence at all,
By guileful fair words, peace may be obtain'd.
Shakeſp. Henry VI.

He ſaw his guileful act
By Eve, though all unweeting, ſeconded
Upon her huſband. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

The guileful phantom now forſook the ſhrowd,
And flew ſublime, and vaniſh'd in a cloud.
Dryden's Æn.

A fly as Caſſio. Ay, ſmile upon her, do. I will gyve thee in thine own courtſhip. Shakeſp.

H

HA

H Is in Engliſh, as in other languages, a note of aſpiration, ſounded only by a ſtrong emiſſion of the breath, without any conformation of the organs of ſpeech, and is therefore by many grammarians accounted no letter. The h in Engliſh is ſcarcely ever mute at the beginning of a word, or where it immediately precedes a vowel; as houſe, behaviour: where it is followed by a conſonant it has no ſound, according to the preſent pronunciation, but anciently, as now in Scotland, it made the ſyllable guttural; as right, bought.

HA. interject. [ha, Latin.]

1. An expreſſion of wonder, ſurpriſe, ſudden queſtion or ſudden exertion.

You ſhall look fairer ere I give or hazard:

He hath a better bad habit of frowning than the count Palatine. Shakeſp.

4. Cuſtom; inveterate uſe.

The laſt fatal ſtep is, by frequent repetition of the ſinful act, to continue and perſiſt in it, 'till at length it ſettles into a fixed confirmed habit of ſin; which being that which the apoſtle calls the finiſhing of ſin, ends certainly in death; death not only as to merit, but alſo as to actual infliction. South.

No civil broils have ſince his death aroſe,
But faction now by habit does obey;
And wars have that reſpect for his repoſe,
As winds for halcyons when they breed at ſea. Dryd.

The force of education is ſo great, that we may mould the minds and manners of the young into what ſhape we pleaſe, and give the impreſſions of ſuch habits as ſhall ever afterwards remain. Atterbury.

To HA'BIT. v. a. [from the nonn.] To dreſs; to accoutre; to array.

Preſent yourſelf and your fair princeſs
Before Leontes:
She ſhall be habited as it becomes
The partner of your bed. Shakeſp. Winter's Tale.

To HA'LLOW. v. a. [halgian, halig, Saxon, holy.]

1. To consecrate; to make holy.
When we sanctify or hallow churches, it is only to testify that we make them places of publick resort; that we invest God himself with them, and that we sever them from common uses. Hooker.
It cannot be endured to hear a man profess that he putteth fire to his neighbour's house, but yet so halloweth the same with prayer, that he hopeth it shall not burn. Hooker.
Is't Cade that I have slain, that monstrous traitor?
Sword, I will hallow thee for this thy deed,
And hang thee o'er my tomb, when I am dead. Shakespeare.
My prayers
Are not words duly hallow'd, nor my wishes
More worth than vanities; yet pray'rs and wishes
Are all I can return. Shakesp. Henry VIII.
God from work
Now resting, bless'd and hallow'd the seventh day,
As resting on that day from all his works,
But not in silence holy kept. Milton.
Then banish'd faith shall once again return,
And vestal fires in hallow'd temples burn. Dryden.
No satyr lurks within this hallow'd ground;
But nymphs and heroines, kings and gods abound. Granv.
2. To reverence as holy; hallowed be thy name.

HALLUCINA'TION. n. s. [hallucinatio, Lat.] Error; blunder; mistake; folly.
A wasting of flesh, without cause, is frequently termed a bewitching disease; but questionless a mere hallucination of the vulgar. Harvey.

To me inveterate, harks my brother's suit. Shakesp.

Pricking up his ears to hark
If he could hear too in the dark. Hudibras.

HARK. interj. [It is originally the imperative of the verb hark.] List! hear! listen!

What harmony is this? My good friends, hark! Shakespeare.

The butcher saw him upon the gallop with a piece of flesh, and called out, Hark ye, friend, you may make the best of your purchase. L'Estrange.

Hark! methinks the roar that late pursu'd me,
Sinks like the murmurs of a falling wind. Rowe.

Hark how loud the woods
Invite you forth! Thomson.

HARL. n. s.

1. The filaments of flax.

2. Any filamentous substance.

The general sort are wicker hives, made of privet, willow, or harl, daubed with cow-dung. Mortimer.

HA'RLEQUIN. n. s. [This name is said to have been given by Francis of France to a busy buffoon, in ridicule of his enemy Charles le quint. Menage derives it more probably from a famous comedian that frequented Mr. Harley's house, whom his friends called Harlequin, little Harley. Trev.] A buffoon who plays tricks to divert the populace; a Jack-pudding; a zani.

The joy of a king for a victory must not be like that of a harlequin upon a letter from his mistress. Dryden.

The man in graver tragick known,
Though his best part long since was done,
Still on the stage desires to tarry;
And he who play'd the harlequin,
After the jest still loads the scene,
Unwilling to retire, though weary. Prior.

HA'RLOT. n. s. [herlodes, Welsh, a girl. Others for harelet, a little whore. Others from the name of the mother of William the Conqueror. Harlet is used in Chaucer for a low male drudge.] A whore; a strumpet.

Away, my disposition, and possess me with
Some harlot's spirit. Shakesp.

They help thee by such aids as geese and harlots. Ben Jonson.

The barbarous harlots crowd the publick place;
Go, fools, and purchase an unclean embrace. Dryden.

HA'RLOTRY. n. s. [from harlot.]

1. The trade of a harlot; fornication.

Nor shall,
From Rome's tribunal, thy harangues prevail
'Gainst harlotry, while thou art clad so thin. Dryden.

2. A name of contempt for a woman.

A peevish self-will'd harlotry,
That no persuasion can do good upon. Shakesp.

HARM. n. s. [hearm, Saxon.]

1. Injury; crime; wickedness.

2. Mischief; detriment; hurt.

We, ignorant of ourselves,
Beg often our own harms, which the wise Powers
Deny us for our good. Shakesp.

How are we happy still in fear of harm?
But harm precedes not sin. Milton.

They should be suffered to write on: it would keep them out of harm's way, and prevent them from evil courses. Swift.

To HARM. v. a. To hurt; to injure.

What sense had I of her stol'n hours of lust?
I saw't not, thought it not, it harm'd not me. Shak.

Passions ne'er could grow
To harm another, or impeach your rest. Waller.

After their young are hatched, they brood them under their wings, lest the cold, and sometimes the heat should harm them. Ray.

HA'RMFUL. adj. [harm and full.] Hurtful; mischievous; noxious; injurious; detrimental.

His dearly loved squire
His spear of heben-wood behind him bare,
Whose harmful head, thrice heated in the fire,
Had riven many a breast with pike-head square. Spenser.

Let no man fear that harmful creature lest, because he sees the apostle safe from that poison. Hall.

The earth brought forth fruit and food for man, without any mixture of harmful quality. Raleigh.

For flax and oats will burn the tender field,
And sleepy poppies harmful harvests yield. Dryden.

HA'RMFULLY. adv. [from harmful.] Hurtfully; noxiously; detrimentally.

A scholar is better occupied in playing or sleeping, than spending his time not only vainly, but harmfully in such kind of exercise. Ascham.

HA'RMFULNESS. n. s. [from harmful.] Hurtfulness; mischievousness; noxiousness.

HA'RMLESS. adj. [from harm.]

1. Innocent; innoxious; not hurtful.

Touching ceremonies harmless in themselves, and hurtful only in respect of number, was it amiss to decree that those things that were least needful, and newliest come, should be the first that were taken away? Hooker.

She, like harmless lightning, threw her eye
On him, her brothers, me, her master; lighting
Each object with a joy. Shakesp.

2. Unhurt; undamaged.

The shipwright will be careful to gain by his labour, or at least to save himself harmless, and therefore suit his work slightly, according to a slight price. Raleigh.

HA'RMLESSLY. adv. [from harmless.] Innocently; without hurt; without crime.

He spent that day free from worldly trouble, harmlessly, and in a recreation that became a churchman. Walton.

Bullets batter the walls which stand inflexible, but fall harmlessly into wood or feathers. Decay of Piety.

HA'RMLESSNESS. n. s. [from harmless.] Innocence; freedom from tendency to injury or hurt.

When, through tasteless flat humility,
In dough-bak'd men some harmlessness we see,
'Tis but his phlegm that's virtuous, and not he. Donne

Compare the harmlessness, the credulity, the tenderness, the modesty, and the ingenuous pliableness to virtuous counsels, which is in youth untainted, with the mischievousness, the slyness, the craft, the impudence, the falsehood, and the confirmed obstinacy in an aged long-practised sinner. South.

HARMO'NICAL. } adj. [μελικος; harmonique, French.]
HA'RMONICK. }

1. Relating to musick; susceptible of musical proportion to each other.

After every three whole notes, nature requireth, for all harmonical use, one half note to be interposed. Bacon.

2. Concordant; musical; proportioned to each other: less properly.

Harmonical sounds, and discordant sounds, are both active and positive; but blackness and darkness are, indeed, but privatives. Bacon.

So swells each wind-pipe; ass intones to ass,
Harmonick twang of leather, horn, and brass. Pope.

HARMO'NIOUS. adj. [harmonieux, Fr. from harmony.]

1. Adapted to each other; having the parts proportioned to each other; symmetrical.

All the wide-extended sky,
And all the harmonious worlds on high,
And Virgil's sacred work shall dye. Cowley.

God has made the intellectual world harmonious and beautiful without us; but it will never come into our heads all at once; we must bring it home piece-meal. Locke.

2. Having sounds concordant to each other; musical; symphonious.

Thoughts that voluntary move

The verse of Chaucer is not harmonious to us; but they who lived with him, thought it musical. Dryden.

HARMO'NIOUSLY. adv. [from harmonious.]

1. With just adaptation and proportion of parts to each other.

Not chaos-like, together crush'd and bruis'd;
But as the world, harmoniously confus'd:
Where order in variety we see,
And where, though all things differ, they agree. Pope.

That all these distances, motions, and quantities of matter should be so accurately and harmoniously adjusted in this great variety of our system, is above the

the fortuitous hits of blind material causes, and must certainly flow from that eternal fountain of wisdom. Bentley.

2. Musically; with concord of sounds.

If we look upon the world as a musical instrument, well-tuned and harmoniously struck, we ought not to worship the instrument, but him that makes the musick. Stillingfleet.

HARMO'NIOUSNESS. n. s. [from harmonious.] Proportion; musicalness.

To HA'RMONIZE. v. a. [from harmony.] To adjust in fit proportions; to make musical.

Love first invented verse, and form'd the rhime,
The motion measur'd, harmoniz'd the chime.

HA'RMONY. n. s. [ἁρμονία; harmonie, Fr.]

1. The just adaptation of one part to another.

The pleasures of the eye and ear are but the effects of equality, good proportion, or correspondence; for that equality and correspondence are the causes of harmony. Bacon.

The harmony of things,
As well as that of sounds, from discord springs. Dryden.

Sure infinite wisdom must accomplish all its works with consummate harmony, proportion, and regularity. Cheyne.

2. Just proportion of sound; musical concord.

The sound
Symphonious, of ten thousand harps that tun'd
Angelic harmonies. Milton.

Harmony is a compound idea, made up of different sounds united. Watts.

3. Concord; correspondent sentiment.

In us both one soul,
Harmony to behold in wedded pair!
More grateful than harmonious sounds to th' ear. Milton.

I no sooner in my heart divin'd,
My heart, which by a secret harmony
Still moves with thine, join'd in connexion sweet! Milton.

HA'RNESS. n. s. [harnois, Fr.] supposed from iern or hiern, Runick; hairn, Welsh and Erse, iron.

1. Armour; defensive furniture of war. Somewhat antiquated.

A goodly knight, all dress'd in harness meet,
That from his head no place appeared to his feet. Spenser.

He doth fill fields with harness. Shakesp.

Were I a great man, I should fear to drink:
Great men should drink with harness on their throats. Shakesp.

2. The traces of draught horses, particularly of carriages of pleasure or state: of other carriages we say geer.

Or wilt thou ride? Thy horses shall be trapp'd,
Their harness studded all with gold and pearl. Shak.

Their steeds around,
Free from the harness, graze the flow'ry ground. Dryden.

To HARNESS. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To dress in armour.

He was harnest light, and to the field goes he. Shakespeare.

Full fifty years, harness'd in rugged steel,
I have endur'd the biting Winter's blast. Rowe.

2. To fix horses in their traces.

Before the door her iron chariot stood,
All ready harnessed for journey new. Spenser.

Harness the horses, and get up the horsemen, and stand forth with your helmets. Jer. xlvi. 4.

When I plow my ground, my horse is harnessed and chained to my plough. Hale's Orig. of Mankind.

To the harnessed yoke
They lend their shoulder, and begin their toil. Thomson.

HARP. n. s. [heorp, Saxon; harpe, French. It is used through both the Teutonick and Roman dialects, and has been long in use. *Romanus*q; lyrâ plaudat tibi, Barbarus harpâ. Ven. Fort.]

1. A lyre; an instrument strung with wire and commonly struck with the finger.

Arion, when through tempest cruel wrack
He forth was thrown into the greedy seas,
Through the sweet musick which his harp did make,
Allur'd a dolphin him from death to ease. Spenser.

They touch'd their golden harps, and hymning prais'd
God and his works. Milton.

Nor wanted tuneful harp, nor vocal quire;
The muses sung, Apollo touch'd the lyre. Dryden.

2. A constellation.

Next shines the harp, and through the liquid skies
The shell as lightest, first begins to rise;
Thus when sweet Orpheus struck to list'ning rocks
He senses gave, and ears to wither'd oaks. Creech.

To HARP. v. n. [harper, French from the noun.]

1. To play on the harp.

I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps. Rev.

Things without life giving sound, whether pipe or harp, except they give a distinction in the sounds, how shall it be known what is piped or harped? 1 Cor.

The helmed cherubim,
And sworded seraphim,
Are seen in glitt'ring ranks with wings display'd,
Harping in loud and solemn quire,
With unexpressive notes to heav'n's new-born heir. Milton.

2. To touch any passion, as the harper touches a string; to dwell on a subject.

You harp a little too much upon one string. Collier.

Gracious duke,
Harp not on that, nor do not banish reason
For inequality; but let your reason serve
To make the truth appear. Shak. Meas for Meas.

For thy good caution, thanks:
Thou'st harp'd my fear aright. Shakesp. Macbeth.

He seems
Proud and disdainful, harping on what I am,
Not what he knew I was. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleop.

HA'RPER. n. s. [from harp.] A player on the harp.

Never will I trust to speeches penn'd,
Nor to the motion of a schoolboy's tongue;
Nor woo in rhime, like a blind harper's song. Shak.

I'm the god of the harps stop, my fairest:—in vain
Nor the harp, nor the harper, could fetch her again. Tickell.

HA'RPING Iron. n. s. [from harpago, Latin.] A bearded dart with a line fastened to the handle, with which whales are struck and caught.

The boat which on the first assault did go,
Struck with a harping iron the younger foe;
Who, when he felt his side so rudely gor'd,
Loud as the sea that nourish'd him he roar'd. Waller.

HARPONE'ER. n. s. [harponeur, Fr. from harpoon.] He that throws the harpoon in whale fishing.

HARPO'ON. n. s. [harpon, French.] A harping iron.

HA'RPY. n. s. [harpyia, Latin; harpie, harpye, French.]

1. The harpies were a kind of birds which had the faces of women, and foul long claws, very filthy creatures, which, when the table was furnished for Phineus, came flying in, and devouring or carrying away the greater part of the victuals, did so defile the rest that they could not be endured. Raleigh.

That an harpy is not a centaur is by this way as much a truth, as that a square is not a circle. Locke.

2. A ravenous wretch; an extortioner.

I will do you any ambassage to the pigmies, rather than hold three words conference with this harpy. Shakespeare.

HA'RQUEBUS. n. s. [See ARQUEBUSE.] A handgun

HA'RQUEBUSSIER. n. s. [from harquebuss.] One armed with a harquebuss.

Twenty thousand nimble harquebussiers were ranged in length, and but five in a rank. Knolles.

HARRIDA'N. n. s. [corrupted from haridelle, a worn-out worthless horse.] A decayed strumpet.

She just endur'd the Winter she began,
And in four months a batter'd harridan;
Now nothing's left, but wither'd, pale, and shrunk,
To bawd for others, and go shares with punk. Swift.

HA'RROW. n. s. [charroue, French; harcke, German, a rake.] A frame of timbers crossing each other, and set with teeth, drawn over sowed ground to break the clods, and throw the earth over the seed.

The land with daily care
Is exercis'd, and with an iron war
Of rakes and harrows. Dryden.

Two small harrows, that clap on each side of the ridge, harrow it right up and down. Mortimer.

To HA'RROW. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with earth by the harrow.

Friend, harrow in time, by some manner of means,
Not only thy reason, but also thy beans. Tusser.

2. To break with the harrow.

Can'st thou bind the unicorn with his bond in the furrow? or will he harrow the valleys after thee? Job.

Let the Volscians
Plow Rome and harrow Italy. Shakesp.

3. To tear up; to rip up.

I could a tale unfold, whose lightest word
Would harrow up thy soul, freeze thy young blood,
Make thy two eyes, like stars, start from their spheres. Shakesp.

Imagine you behold me bound and scourg'd,
My aged muscles harrow'd up with whips;
Or hear me groaning on the rending rack. Rowe.

4. To pillage; to strip; to lay waste. See HARRY, which in Scottish is the same thing.

As the king did excel in good commonwealth laws, so he had in secret a design to make use of them, as well for collecting of treasure as for correcting of manners; and so meaning thereby to harrow his people, did accumulate them the rather. Bacon.

5. To invade; to harass with incursions. [From þeorzian, Saxon.] Obsolete.

And he that harrow'd hell with heavy stowre,
The faulty souls from thence brought to his heavenly bowre. Fairy Queen.

Most glorious Lord of life, that on this day
Did'st make thy triumph over death and sin;
And having harrow'd hell, did'st bring away
Captivity thence captive, us to win. Spenser.

5. To disturb; to put into commotion. [This should rather be written harry, haser, French.]

Most like, it harrows me with fear and wonder. Shakesp.

Amaz'd I stood, harrow'd with grief and care. Milton.

HA'RROW. interj. An exclamation of sudden distress. Now out of use.

Harrow now out and weal away, he cried;
What dismal day hath sent this cursed light,
To see my lord so deadly damnify'd. Spenser.

HA'RROWER.

HA'RROWER. n. s. [from harrow.]
1. He who harrows.
2. A kind of hawk. Ainsworth.

To HA'RRY. v. a. [harer, French.]
1. To tease; to hare; to ruffle.
Thou muſt not take my former ſharpneſs ill.
I repent me much
That I ſo harry'd him. Shakeſp.
2. In Scotland it ſignifies to rob, plunder, or oppreſs: as, one harried a neſt; that is, he took the young away: as alſo, he harried me out of houſe and home; that is he robbed me of my goods and turned me out of doors. See To HARROW.

HARSH. adj. [herviſche, German, Skinner.]
1. Auſtere; roughly ſour.
Our nature here is not unlike our wine;
Some ſorts, when old, continue brisk and fine:
So age's gravity may ſeem ſevere,
But nothing harſh or bitter ought t'appear. Denham.
Sweet, bitter, ſour, harſh and ſalt, are all the epithets we have to denominate that numberleſs variety of reliſhes. Locke.
The ſame defect of heat which gives a fierceneſs to our natures, may contribute to that roughneſs of of language, which bears ſome analogy to the harſh fruit of colder countries Swift.
2. Rough to the ear.
A name unmuſical to Volſcian ears,
And harſh in ſound to thine. Shakeſp.
Age might, what nature never gives the young,
Have taught the ſmoothneſs of thy native tongue;
But ſatire needs not that, and wit will ſhine
Through the harſh cadence of a rugged line. Dryd.
The unneceſſary conſonants made their ſpelling tedious, and their pronunciation harſh. Dryden.
Thy lord commands thee now
With a harſh voice, and ſupercilious brow,
To ſervile duties. Dryden.
3. Crabbed; moroſe; peeviſh.
He was a wiſe man and an eloquent; but in his nature harſh and haughty. Bacon.
Bear patiently the harſh words of thy enemies, as knowing that the anger of an enemy admoniſhes us of our duty. Taylor.
No harſh reflection let remembrance raiſe;
Forbear to mention what thou can'ſt not praiſe. Prior.
A certain quickneſs of apprehention inclined him to kindle into the firſt motions of anger; but for a long time before he died, no one heard an intemperate or harſh word proceed from him. Atterbury.
4. Rugged to the touch; rough.
Black feels as if you were feeling needles points, or ſome harſh ſand; and red feels very ſmooth. Boyle.
5. Unpleaſing; rigorous.
With eloquence innate his tongue was arm'd;
Though harſh the precept, yet the preacher charm'd. Dryden.

HA'RSHLY. adv. [from harſh.
1. Sourly; auſterely to the palate, as unripe fruit.
2. With violence; in oppoſition to gentleneſs, unleſs in the following paſſage it rather ſignifies unripely.
'Till like ripe fruit, thou drop
Into thy mother's lap; or be with eaſe
Gather'd, not harſhly pluck'd. Milton.
3. Severely; moroſely; crabbedly.
I would rather he was a man of a rough temper, that would treat me harſhly, than of an effeminate nature. Addiſon.
4. Unpleaſantly to the ear.
My wife is in a wayward mood to-day;
I tell you, 'twould ſound harſhly in her ears. Shak.
Get from him why he puts on this confuſion,
Grating ſo harſhly all his days of quiet
With turbulent and dang'rous lunacy. Shakeſp.
The ſings of iron that on the doors were hung,
Sent out a jarring ſound, and harſhly rung. Dryd.

HA'RSHNESS. n. ſ. [from harſh.]
1. Sourneſs; auſterity.
Take an apple [illegible] upon a table hard: the rolling doth ſoften and ſweeten the fruit, which is nothing but the ſmooth diſtribution of the ſpirits into the parts; for the unequal diſtribution of the ſpirits maketh the harſhneſs. Bacon.
2. Roughneſs to the ear.
Neither can the natural harſhneſs of the French, or the perpetual ill accent, be ever refined into perfect harmony like the Italian. Dryden.
Cannot I admire the height of Milton's invention, and the ſtrength of his expreſſion, without defending his antiquated words, and the perpetual harſhneſs of their ſound? Dryden.
'Tis not enough no harſhneſs gives offence;
The ſound muſt ſeem an echo to the ſenſe. Pope.
3. Ruggedneſs to the touch.
Harſhneſs and ruggedneſs of bodies is unpleaſant to the touch. Bacon.
4. Crabbedneſs; moroſeneſs; peeviſhneſs.
Thy tender-hefted nature ſhall not give
Thee o'er to harſhneſs: her eyes are fierce, but thine
Do comfort and not burn. Shakeſp.

HART. n. ſ. [peopt, Saxon.] A he-deer; the male of the roe.
That inſtant was I turn'd into a hart,
And my deſires, like fell and cruel hounds,
E'er ſince purſue me. Shakeſp.
The deer
And fearful harts do wander every where Amidſt the dogs. May's Virgil.

HA'RTSHORN. n. ſ.
Hartſhorn is a drug that comes into uſe many ways, and under many forms. What is uſed here are the whole horns of the common male deer, which fall off every year. This ſpecies is the fallow deer; but ſome tell us, that the medicinal hartſhorn ſhould be that of the true hart or ſtag. The ſalt of hartſhorn is a great ſudorifick, and the ſpirit has all the virtues of volatile alkalies: it is uſed to bring people out of ſwooning by its pungency, holding it under the noſe, and pouring down ſome drops of it in water. Hill.
Ramoſe concretions of the volatile ſalts are obſervable upon the glaſs of the receiver, whilſt the ſpirits of vipers and hartſhorn are drawn. Woodward.

HA'RTSHORN. n. ſ. An herb. Ainſworth.

HART-ROYAL. n. ſ. A plant. A ſpecies of buckthorn-plaintain.

HA'RTSTONGUE. n. ſ. [lingua cervina, Lat.] A plant.

And ſhortly comes to harveſt. Shakeſp.
With harveſt work he is worſe than in Spring.
L'Eſtrange.
2. The corn ripened, gathered and inned.
From Ireland come I with my ſtrength,
And reap the harveſt which that raſcal ſow'd. Shak.
When the father is too fondly kind,
Such ſeed he ſows, ſuch harveſt ſhall he find. Dryd.
3. The product of labour.
Let us the harveſt of our labour eat;
'Tis labour makes the coarſeſt diet ſweet. Dryden.

HARVEST-HOME. n. ſ.
1. The ſong which the reapers ſing at the feaſt made for having inned the harveſt.
Your hay it is mow'd, and your corn is reap'd;
Your barns will be full, and your hovels heap'd:
Come, my boys, come,
Come, my boys, come,
And merrily roar out harveſt-home. Dryden.
2. The time of gathering harveſt.
At harveſt-home, and on the ſhearing-days,
When he ſhould thanks to Pan and Pales pay. Dryd.

Had ris'n or heav'd his head, but that the will
And high permission of all ruling heaven
Left him at large. Milton.
2. To carry.
Now we bear the king
Tow'rd Calais: grant him there: and there being seen,
Heave him away upon your winged thoughts
Athwart the sea. Shakesp.
3. To raise; to lift.
So daunted, when the giant saw the knight,
His heavy hand he heaved up on high,
And him to dust thought to have batter'd quite.
Spenser.
I cannot heave
My heart into my mouth. Shakesp.
He dy'd in fight;
Fought next my person, as in concert fought,
Save when he heav'd his shield in my defence,
And on his naked side receiv'd my wound.
Dryden.
4. To cause to swell.
The groans of ghosts, that cleave the earth with pain,
And heave it up: they pant and stick half way.
Dryden.
The glittering finny swarms,
That heave our friths and crowd upon our shores.
Thomson.
5. To force up from the breast.
Made she no verbal quest?
—Yes, once or twice she heav'd the name of father
Pantingly forth, as if it prest her heart. Shakesp.
The wretched animal heav'd forth such groans
That their discharge did stretch his leathern coat
Almost to bursting. Shakesp. As you like it.
6. To exalt; To elevate.
Poor shadow painted queen;
One heav'd on high, to be hurl'd down below.
Shakesp.
7. To puff; to elate.
The Scots, heaved up into high hope of victory, took the English for foolish birds fallen into their net, forsook their hill, and marched into the plain. Hayward.

To HEAVE. v. n.
1. To pant; to breathe with pain.
'Tis such as you,
That creep like shadows by him, and do sigh
At each his needless heavings; such as you
Nourish the cause of his awaking. Shakesp.
He heaves for breath, which, from his lungs supply'd,
And fetch'd from far, distends his lab'ring side.
Dryden.
2. To labour.
The church of England had struggled and heaved at a reformation ever since Wickliff's days. Atterbury.
3. To rise with pain; to swell and fall.
Thou hast made my curdled blood run back,
My heart heave up, my hair to rise in bristles.
Dryden.
The wand'ring breath was on the wing to pass
Weak was the pulse, and hardly heav'd the breast.
Dryden.
No object affects my imagination so much as the sea or ocean: I cannot see the heaving of this prodigious bulk of waters, even in a calm, without a very pleasing astonishment. Addison.
Frequent for breath his panting bosom heaves.
Prior.
The heaving tide
In widen'd circles beats on either side. Gay.
4. To keck; to feel a tendency to vomit.

Heav'n banish'd host, left desert utmost hell.
Milton.
All yet left of that revolted rout,
Heaven fall'n, in station stood, or just array,
Sublime with expectation. Milton.
3. The supreme power; the sovereign of heaven.
Now heav'n help him! Shakespeare.
The will
And high permission of all-ruling heaven
Left him at large. Milton.
The prophets were taught to know the will of God, and thereby instruct the people, and enabled to prophesy, as a testimony of their being sent by heaven. Temple.
4. The pagan gods; the celestials.
Take physick, pomp;
Expose thyself to feel what wretches feel,
That thou may'st shake the superflux to them,
And show the heavens more just. Shakesp.
They can judge as fitly of his worth,
As I can of those mysteries which heaven
Will not have the world to know. Shakesp.
Heav'n! what a spring was in his arm to throw!
How high he held his shield, and rose at ev'ry blow!
Dryden.
5. Elevation; sublimity.
O, for a muse of fire, that would ascend
The brightest heaven of invention. Shakesp.
6. It is often used in composition.

Who taught that heav'n-directed spire to rise? Pope.
2. Taught by the powers of heaven.
O sacred weapon; left for truth's defence;
To all but heaven-directed hands deny'd,
The muse may give it, but the gods must guide. Pope.

HEAVENLY. adj. [from heaven.]
1. Resembling heaven; supremely excellent.
As the love of heaven makes one heavenly, the love of virtue virtuous, so doth the love of the world, make one become worldly. Sidney.
Not Maro's muse, who sung the mighty man;
Nor Pindar's heav'nly lyre, nor Horace when a swan. Dryden.
2. Celestial; inhabiting heaven.
Adoring first the genius of the place,
Then earth, the mother of the heav'nly race. Dryden.

HEAVENLY. adv.
1. In a manner resembling that of heaven.
In these deep solitudes and awful cells,
Where heav'nly pensive contemplation dwells,
And ever-musing melancholy reigns,
What means this tumult in a vestal's veins? Pope.
2. By the agency or influence of heaven.
Truth and peace and love shall ever shine
About the supreme throne
Of him, t'whose happy-making sight alone,
When once our heav'nly guided soul shall climb. Milton.

HEAVENWARD. adv. [heaven and peapb, Saxon.] Towards heaven.
I prostrate lay,
By various doubts impell'd, or to obey,
Or to object; at length, my mournful look
Heav'nward erect, determin'd, thus I spoke. Prior.

HE'AVILY. adv. [from heavy.]
1. With great ponderousness.
2. Grievously; afflictively.
Ease must be impracticable to the envious; they lie under a double misfortune; common calamities and common blessings fall heavily upon them. Collier.

And slaughter'd hecatombs around them bleed. Addison.

HE'CTICAL. } adj. [hectique, French, from ἕξις.]
HE'CTICK. }
1. Hab-

1. Habitual; constitutional.

This word is joined only to that kind of fever which is slow and continual, and ending in a consumption, is the contrary to those fevers which arise from a plethora, or too great fullness from obstruction. It is attended with too lax a state of the excretory passages, and generally those of the skin; whereby so much runs off as leaves not resistance enough in the contractile vessels to keep them sufficiently distended, so that they vibrate oftener, agitate the fluids the more, and keep them thin and hot. Quincy.

A hectick fever hath got hold
Of the whole substance not to be controul'd.
Donne.

2. Troubled with a morbid heat.

No Hectick student scars the gentle maid. Taylor.

He'CTICK. n. s. An hectick fever.

Like the hectick in my blood he rages,
And thou must cure me. Shakesp. Hamlet.

He'CTOR n. s. [from the name of Hector, the great Homeric warriour.] A bully; a blustering, turbulent, pervicacious noisy fellow.

Those usurping hectors, who pretend to honour without religion, think the charge of a lye a blot not to be washed out but by blood. South.

We'll take one cooling cup of nectar,
And drink to this celestial hector. Prior.

To He'CTOR. v. n. [from the noun.] To threaten; to treat with insolent authoritative terms.

They reckon they must part with honour together with their opinion, if they suffer themselves to be hectored out of it. Government of the Tongue.

The weak low spirit Fortune makes her slave;
But she's a drudge, when hector'd by the brave.
Dryden.

An honest man, when he came home at night, found another fellow domineering in his family, hectoring his servants, and calling for supper.
Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

To He'CTOR. v. n. To play the bully; to bluster.

They have attacked me, some with piteous moans and outcries, others grinning and only shewing their teeth, others ranting and hectoring, others scolding and reviling. Stilling fleet.

One would think the hectoring, the storming, the sullen, and all the different species of the angry, should be cured. Spect.

Don Carlos made her chief director,
That she might o'er the servants hector. Swift.

HEDERA'CEOUS. adj. [hederaceus, Lat.] Producing ivy. Dict.

HEDGE. n. s. [hegge, Saxon.] A fence made round grounds with prickly bushes, or woven twigs.

It is a good wood for fire, if kept dry; and is very useful for stakes in hedges. Mortimer.

The gardens unfold variety of colours to the eye every morning, and the hedges breath is beyond all perfume. Pope.

Through the verdant maze
Of sweet-briar hedges I pursue my walk. Thomson.

HEDGE, prefixed to any word, notes something mean, vile, of the lowest class: perhaps from a hedge, or hedge born man, a man without any known place of birth.

There are five in the first show: the pedant, the braggart, the hedge-priest, the fool, and the boy.
Shakespeare.

The clergy do much better than a little hedge, contemptible, illiterate mear can be presumed to do. Swift.

A person, who, by his style and literature, seems to have been the corrector of a hedge-press in Little Britain, proceeded gradually to an author. Swift.

To HEDGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To inclose with a hedge, or fence of wood dry or growing.

Hedge thy possession about with thorns. Ecclus.

Those alleys must be hedged at both ends, to keep out the wind. Bacon.

2. To obstruct.

3. To incircle for defence.

England, hedg'd in with the main,
That water-walled bulwark, still secure
And confident from foreign purposes. Shakesp.

There's such divinity doth hedge a king,
That treason can but peep to what it would.
Shakespeare.

4. To shut up within an inclosure.

It must not be paid and exported in ready money; so says our law; but that is a law to hedge in the cuckow, and serves for no purpose; for if we export not goods, for which our merchants have money due to them, how can it be paid by bills of exchange.
Locke.

5. To force into a place already full. This seems to be mistaken for edge. To edge in, is to put in by the way that requires least room; but hedge may signify to thrust in with difficulty, as into a hedge.

You forget yourself
To hedge me in. Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.

When I was hasty, thou delayd'st me longer:
I pr'ythee, let me hedge one moment more
Into thy promise; for thy life preserv'd. Dryd.

When you are sent on an errand, be sure to hedge in some business of your own. Swift.

To HEDGE. v. n. To shift; to hide the head.

I myself sometimes hiding mine honour in my necessity, am fain to shuffle, to hedge, and to lurch.
Shakespeare.

HEDGE-BORN. adj. [hedge and born] Of no known birth; meanly born.

He then, that is not furnish'd in this sort,
Doth but usurp the sacred name of knight,
And should, if I were worthy to be judge,
Be quite degraded, like a hedge-born swain,
That doth presume to boast of gentle blood. Shak.

HEDGE CREEPER. n. s. [hedge and creep.] One that skulks under hedges for bad purposes.

HEDGE-FUMITORY. n. s. A plant; fumaria fepium. Ainsworth.

HEDGE-HOG. n. s. [hedge and hog; crinaceus.]

1. An animal set with prickles, like thorns in an hedge.

Like hedge-hogs, which
Lie tumbling in my bare-foot way, and mount
Their pricks at my foot-fall. Shakesp. Tempest.

Few have belief to swallow, or hope enough to experience, the collyrium of Albertus; that is to make one see in the dark; yet thus much, according unto his receipt, will the right eye of an hedge-hog, boiled in oil, and preserved in a brazen vessel, effect.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

The hedge-hog hath his backside and flanks thick set with strong and sharp prickles; and besides, by the help of a muscle, can contract himself into a globular figure, and so withdraw his [illegible] underpart, head, belly and legs, within his [illegible] prickles.
Ray.

2. A term of reproach.

Did'st thou not kill this king [illegible]
——I grant ye.

To HEED. v. a. [hebban, Saxon.] To mind; to regard; to take notice of; to attend.

With pleasure Argus the musician heeds;
But wonders much at those new vocal reeds. Dryd.

He will no more have clear ideas of all the operations of his mind, than he will have all the particular ideas of any landscape or clock, who will not turn his eyes to it and with attention heed all the parts of it.
Locke.

HEED. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Care; attention.

With wanton heed and giddy cunning,
The melting voice through mazes running. Milton.

Take heed that, in their tender years, ideas, that have no natural cohesion, come not to be united in their heads. Locke.

Thou must take heed, my Portius;
The world has all its eyes on Cato's son. Addison.

2. Caution; fearful attention; suspicious watch.

Either wife bearing or ignorant carriage is caught as men catch diseases, one of another; therefore let men take heed of their company. Shakespeare's

HERO'ICALLY. adv. [from heroical.] After the way of an hero; suitably to an hero.
Not heroically in killing his tyrannical cousin. Sidney.
Free from all meaning, whether good or bad;
And in one word heroically mad. Dryden.

HERO'ICK. adj. [from hero; heroique, Fr.]

1. Productive of heroes.
Bolingbroke
From John of Gaunt doth bring his pedigree,
Being but the fourth of that heroick line. Shakesp.

2. Noble; suitable to an hero; brave; magnanimous; intrepid; enterprising; illustrious.
Not that which justly gives heroick name
To person, or to poem. Milton.
Verse makes heroick virtue live,
But you can life to verses give. Waller.

3. Reciting the acts of heroes. Used of poetry.
Methinks heroick poesy, 'till now,
Like some fantastick fairy land did show. Cowley.
I have chosen the most heroick subject which any poet could desire: I have taken upon me to describe the motives, the beginning, progress and successes of a most just and necessary war. Dryden.
An heroick poem is the greatest work which the soul of man is capable to perform: the design of it is to form the mind to heroick virtue by example. Dryden.

HERO'ICKLY adv. [from heroick.] Suitably to an hero. Heroically is more frequent and more analogical.
Samson hath quit himself
Like Samson, and heroickly hath finish'd
A life heroick. Milton.

HE'ROINE. n. f. [from hero; heroine, Fr.] A female hero. Anciently, according to English analogy, heroess.
But inborn worth, that fortune can controul,
New-strung, and stiffer bent her softer soul;
The heroine assum'd the woman's place,
Confirm'd her mind, and fortify'd her face. Dryd.
Then shall the British stage
More noble characters expose to view,
And draw her finish'd heroines from you. Addison.

HE'ROISM. n. f. [heroïsme, Fr.] The qualities or character of an hero.
If the Odyssey be less noble than the Iliad, it is more instructive: the Iliad abounds with more heroism, this with more morality. Broome.

HERON. n. f. [heron, Fr.]

1. A bird that feeds upon fish.
So lords, with sport of stag and heron full,
Sometimes we see small birds from nests do pull. Sidney.
The heron, when she soareth high, sheweth winds. Bacon.

2. It is now commonly pronounced hern.
The tow'ring hawk let future poets sing,
Who terror bears upon his soaring wing;
Let them on high the frighted hern survey,
And lofty numbers paint their airy fray. Gay.

HE'RONRY. } n. f. [from heron, com-
HE'RONSHAW, } monly pronounced hern-ry.] A place where herons breed.
They carry their load to a large heronry above three miles. Derham's Physico-Theology.

HE'RPES. [n. f. ἕρπης,] A cutaneous inflammation of two kinds: miliaris, or pustularis, which is like millet-seed upon the skin; and excedens, which is more corrosive and penetrating, so as to form little ulcers. Quincy.
A farther progress towards acrimony maketh a herpes; and, if the access of acrimony be very great it maketh an herpes excedens. Wiseman's Surgery.

HE'RRING. n. f. [hareng, French; hæring, Saxon.] A small sea fish.
The coast is plentifully stored with round fish, pilchard, herring, mackrel, and cod. Carew.
Buy my herring fresh. Swift.

HERS. pron. The female possessive used when it refers to a substantive going before: as, this is her house, this house is hers. See HER.
How came her eyes so bright? not with salt tears;
If so, my eyes are oftner wash'd than hers. Shak.
Whom ill fate would ruin, it prefers;
For all the miserable are made hers. Waller.
I see her rowling eyes;
And panting, lo! the god, the god, she cries;
With words not hers, and more than human sound,
She makes th'obedient ghosts peep trembling through the ground. Roscommon.

HERSE. n. f. [herse, low Latin; supposed to come from herian, to praise.] This is likewise written hearse; see HEARSE.

1. A temporary monument raised over a grave.

2. The carriage in which corpses are drawn to the grave.
When mourning nymphs attend their Daphnis' herse,
Who does not weep that reads the moving verse? Roscom.
On all the line a sudden vengeance waits,
And frequent herses shall besiege your gates. Pope.

To HERSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To put into an herse.
I would my daughter were dead at my foot, and the jewels in her ear. O, would she were hers'd at my foot, and the ducats in her coffin. Shakesp.
The Grecians spitefully drew from the darts the corse,
And hers'd it bearing it to fleet. Chapman.
The house is hers'd about with a black wood,
Which nods with many a heavy-headed tree. Crashaw.

HERSELF. pronoun.

1. A female individual, as distinguished from others.
The jealous o'er-worn widow and herself,
Since that our brother dubb'd them gentlewomen,
Are mighty gossips in this monarchy. Shakesp.

2. Being in her own power; mistress of her own thoughts.
The more she looks, the more her fears increase,
At nearer sight; and she's herself the less. Dryden.

3. The oblique case of the reciprocal pronoun; as, she hurt herself.
The daughter of Pharaoh came down to wash herself. Exodus.
She returned answer to herself. Judges.

HE'RSELIKE. adj. [herse and like.] Funeral; suitable to funerals.
Even in the Old Testament, if you listen to David's harp, you shall hear as many herselike airs as carols. Bacon.

To HE'RY. v. a. [herian, Saxon, to praise, to celebrate.] To hallow; to regard as holy. Now no longer in use.
Thenot, now 'tis the time of merrymake,
Nor Pan to hery, nor with love to play;
Like mirth in May is meetest for to make,
Or summer shade, under the cocked hay. Spenser.
But were thy years green as now be mine,
Then would'st thou learn to carol of love,
And hery with hymns thy lass's glove. Spenser.

HE'SITANCY. n. f. [from hesitate.] Dubiousness; uncertainty; suspence.
The reason of my hesitancy about the air is that I forgot to try whether that liquor, which shot into crystals, exposed to the air, would not have done the like in a vessel accurately stopped. Boyle.
Some of them reasoned without doubt or hesitancy, and lived and died in such a manner as to shew that they believed their own reasonings. Atterbury.

To HE'SITATE. v. a. [hæsito, Latin; hesiter, French.] To be doubtful; to delay; to pause; to make difficulty.
A spirit of revenge makes him curse the Grecians in the seventh book, when they hesitate to accept Hector's challenge. Pope.
Willing to wound, and yet afraid to strike,
Just hint a fault, and hesitate dislike;
Alike reserv'd to blame or to commend,
A tim'rous foe, and a suspicious friend. Pope.

HESITA'TION. n. f. [from hesitate.]

1. Doubt; uncertainty; difficulty made.
I cannot foresee the difficulties and hesitations of every one: they will be more or fewer, according to the capacity of each peruser. Woodward's Natural History.

2. Intermission of speech; want of volubility.
Many clergymen write in so diminutive a manner, with such frequent blots and interlineations, that they are hardly able to go on without perpetual hesitations. Swift.

HEST. n. f. [hært, Saxon.] Command; precept; injunction. Obsolete, or written behest.
Thou dost afflict the not deserver,
As him that doth thy lovely hests despise. Spenser.
Thou wast a spirit too delicate
To act her earthy and abhorr'd commands,

HE'TEROCLITE. n. f. [heteroclite, Fr. heteroclitum, Latin; ἕτερος and κλίνω.]

1. Such nouns as vary from the common forms of declension, by any redundancy, defect or otherwise. Clarke.
The heteroclite nouns of the Latin should not be touched in the first learning of the rudiments of the tongue. Watts.

2. Any thing or person deviating from the common rule.

HETEROCLI'TICAL. adj. [from heteroclite.] Deviating from the common rule.
In the mention of sins heteroclitical, and such as want either name or precedent, there is oft times a sin, even in their histories. Brown.

HE'TERODOX. adj. [heterodoxe, French; ἕτερος and δόξα.] Deviating from the established opinion; not orthodox.
Partiality may be observed in some to vulgar, in others to heterodox tenets. Locke.

HE'TERODOX. n. f. An opinion peculiar.
Not only a simple heterodox, but a very hard paradox it will seem, and of great absurdity, if we say attraction is unjustly appropriated unto the loadstone. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

HETEROGE'NEAL. adj. [heterogene, Fr. ἕτερος and γένος.] Not of the same nature; not kindred.
Let the body adjacent and ambient be not commaterial, but merely heterogeneal towards the body that is to be preserved: such are quicksilver and white amber to herbs and flies. Bacon.
The light whose rays are all alike refrangible, I call simple, homogeneal, and similar; and that whose rays are some more refrangible than others, I call compound, heterogeneal, and dissimilar Newton.

HETEROGENE'ITY. n. s. [heterogeneité, French, from heterogeneous.]

1. Opposition of nature; contrariety or dissimilitude of qualities.

2. Opposite or dissimilar part.

Guaiacum, burnt with an open fire in a chimney, is sequestered into ashes and soot; whereas the same wood, distilled into a retort, does yield far other heterogeneities, and is resolved into oil, spirit, vinegar, water and charcoal. Boyle.

HETEROGE'NEOUS. adj. [ἕτερος and γένος.] Not kindred; opposite or dissimilar in nature.

I have observed such heterogeneous bodies, which I found included in the mass of this sandstone. Woodward.

HETEROSCIANS. n. s. [ἕτερος and σκιὰ.] Those whose shadows fall only one way, as the shadows of us who live north of the Tropick fall at noon always to the North.

To HEW. v. a. part. hewn, or hewed. [heapan, Saxon; houwen, Dutch.]

1. To cut by blows with an edged instrument; to hack.

Upon the joint the lucky steel did light,
And made such way that hew'd it quite in twain. Spenser.

I had purpose
Once more to hew thy target from thy brawn,
Or lose my arm for't. Shakespeare.

He was hewn in pieces by Hamilton's friends. Hayward.

One Vane was so grievously hewn, that many thousands have died of less than half his hurts, whereof he was cured. Hayward.

2. To chop; to cut.

He from deep wells with engines water drew,
And us'd his noble hands the wood to hew. Dryd.

3. To cut, as with an axe; with the particles down, when it signifies to fell; up, to excavate from below; off, to separate.

He that depends
Upon your favours, swims with fins of lead,
And hews down oaks with rushes. Shakesp.

Brave followers, yonder stands the thorny wood,
Which, by the heav'ns assistance and your strength,
Must by the roots be hewn up yet ere night.
Shakespeare.

Scarce can I speak, my choler is so great:
Oh! I could hew up rocks, and fight with flint.
Shakesp.

Yet shall the axe of justice hew him down,
And level with the root his lofty crown. Sandys.

He from the mountain hewing timber tall,
Began to build a vessel of huge bulk. Milton.

We'll force the gate where Marcus keeps his guard,
And hew down all that would oppose our passage.
Addison.

4. To form or shape with an axe: with out.

Thou hast hewed thee out a sepulchre here, as he that hewed, him out a sepulchre on high. Is. xxii.

Nor is it so proper to hew out religious reformations by the sword, as to polish them by fair and equal disputations. K. Ch.

This river rises in the very heart of the Alps, and has a long valley that seems hewn out on purpose to give its waters a passage amidst so many rocks.
Addison on Italy.

5. To form laboriously.

The gate was adamant; eternal frame;
Which hew'd by Mars himself, from Indian quarries came,
The labour of a god. Dryden's Fables.

Next unto bricks are prefer'd the square hewn stone. Mort.

I now pass my days, not studious nor idle, rather polishing old work than hewing out new.
Pope to Swift.

HE'WER. n. s. [from hew.] One whose employment is to cut wood or stone.

At the building of Solomon's temple there were fourscore thousand hewers in the mountains. Brown.

HE'XAGON. n. s. [hexagone, French; ἕξ and γωνία.] A figure of six sides or angles: the most capacious of all the figures that can be added to each other without any interstice; and therefore the cells in honey-combs are of that form.

HEXA'GONAL adj. [from hexagon.] Having six sides or corners.

A diſmal univerſal hiſs, the ſound
Of publick ſcorn! Milton.
Fierce champion fortitude, that knows no fears
Of hiſſes, blows, or want, or loſs of ears. Pope.

HIST. interj. [Of this word I know not the original: ſome thought it a corruption of huſh, huſh it, huſht, hiſt; but I have heard that it is an Iriſh verb commanding ſilence.] An exclamation commanding ſilence.

—Mute ſilence hiſt along!
'Leſs Philomel will deign a ſong,
In her ſweeteſt, ſaddeſt plight,
Smoothing the rugged brow of night. Milton.
Hiſt, hiſt, ſays another that ſtood by, away, doctor; for here's a whole pack of diſmals coming.
Swift.

HISTO'RIAN. n. ſ. [hiſtoricus, Latin; hiſtorien, French.] A writer of facts and events; a writer of hiſtory.

What thanks ſufficient, or what recompence
Equal, have I to render thee, divine
Hiſtorian. Milton
Our country, which has produced writers of the firſt figure in every other kind of work, has been very barren in good hiſtorians. Addiſon.
Not added years on years my taſk could cloſe,
The long hiſtorian of my country's woes. Pope.

HISTO'RICAL. } adj. [hiſtorique, French;
HISTO'RICK. } hiſtoricus, Latin.]

1. Containing or giving an account of facts and events.

Becauſe the beginning ſeemeth abrupt, it needs that you know the occaſion of theſe ſeveral adventures; for the method of a poet hiſtorical is not ſuch as of an hiſtoriographer. Spenſer.
In an hiſtorical relation we uſe terms that are moſt proper and beſt known. Burnet's Theory.
Here riſing bold the patriot's honeſt face;
There warriors frowning in hiſtorick braſs. Pope.

2. Suitable or pertaining to hiſtory or narrative.

With equal juſtice and hiſtorick care,
Their laws, their toils, their arms with his compare.

And at each hit with wonder seem amaz'd. Dryden.

2. A chance; a fortuitous event.

To suppose a watch, by the blind hits of chance, to perform diversity of orderly motions, without the regulation of art, this were the more pardonable absurdity. Granville.

If the rule we judge by be uncertain, it is odds but we shall judge wrong; and if we should judge right, yet it is not properly skill but chance; not a true judgment, but a lucky hit. South.

But with more lucky hit than those
That use to make the kings depose. Hudibras.

The fisherman's waiting, and the lucky hit it had in the conclusion, tells us, that honest endeavours will not fail. L'Estrange.

If casual concourse did the world compose,
And things and hits fortuitous arose,
Then any thing might come from any thing;
For how from chance can constant order spring?
Blackmore

3. A lucky chance.

Have all his ventures fail'd? What, not one hit?
Shakesp.

These hits of words a true poet often finds, without seeking Dryden.

If at first he minds his hits,
And drinks champaigne among the wits,
Five deep he toasts the tow'ring lasses. Prior.

HO'NESTY. n. ſ. [honeſteté, Fr. honeſtas, Lat.] Juſtice; truth; virtue; purity.

Thou that not have the husband's lands,
——Why, then mine honeſty ſhall be my dower. Sh.

Goodneſs, as that which makes men prefer their duty and their promiſe before their paſſions or their intereſt, and is properly the object of truſt, in our language goes rather by the name of honeſty, though what we call an honeſt man, the Romans called a good man; and honeſty, in their language, as well as in French, rather ſignifies a compoſition of thoſe qualities which generally acquire honour and eſteem. Temple.

HO'NEY. n. ſ. [hunig, Saxon; honig, Dutch; honee, honig, German.]

1. A thick, viſcous, fluid ſubſtance, of a whitiſh or yelloviſh colour, ſweet to the taſte, ſoluble in water, and becoming vinous on fermentation, inflammable, liquable by a gentle heat, and of a fragrant ſmell. Of honey, the firſt and fineſt kind is virgin honey, not very firm and of a fragrant ſmell: it is the firſt produce of the ſwarm, obtained by draining the combs without preſſing. The ſecond is often almoſt ſolid, procured by preſſure: and the worſt is the common yellow honey, extracted by heating the combs, and then preſſing them. In the flowers of plants, by certain glands near the baſis, in the petals, is ſecreted a ſweet juice, which the bee, by means of its proboſcis or trunk, ſucks up, and diſcharges again from the ſtomach through the mouth into the comb. The honey depoſited in the comb, is deſtined for the young offſpring: but in hard ſeaſons the bees are reduced to the neceſſity of feeding on it themſelves. Hill.

Strange work to ſee how bees,
Creatures that by a ruling inſtinct teach
The art of order to a peopled kingdom. Shakeſpeare.

Touching his education and firſt feeding, ſome affirm, that he was fed by honey bees. Raleigh's Hiſt.

In ancient time there was a kind of honey, which either of its own nature, or by art, would grow hard as ſugar, and was not ſo luſcious as ours. Bacon.

When the patient is rich, there's no fear of phyſicians about him, as thick as waſps to a honey pot. L'Eſtrange.

Honey is the moſt elaborate production of the vegetable kind, being a moſt exquiſite vegetable ſope, reſolvent of the bile, ballamick and pectoral: honey contains no inflammable ſpirit, before it has felt the force of fermentation; for by diſtillation it affords nothing that will burn in the fire. Arbuthnot.

New wine, with honey temper'd milk we bring;
Then living water from the chryſtal ſpring. Pope.

2. Sweetneſs, luſciouſneſs.

The king hath found
Matter againſt him, that for ever mars
The honey of his language. Shakeſp.

A honey tongue, a heart of gall
Is fancy's ſpring, but ſorrow's fall. Shakeſp.

3. Sweet; ſweetneſs; a name of tenderneſs. [Mel; carcſſum]

Honey, you ſhall be well deſir'd in Cyprus,
I've found great love amongſt them. Oh, my ſweet,

HO'NEY-MOON n. ſ. [honey and moon.] The firſt month after marriage when there is nothing but tenderneſs and pleaſure.

A man ſhould not paſs honey for the latter reaſon of marriage and not begin to taſte the honey-moon is over. Addiſon.

HO'NEY-SUCKLE. n. ſ. [caprifolium, Latin.] Woodbine.

It hath a climbing ſtalk, which twiſts itſelf about whatſoever tree ſtands near it: the flowers are tubulous and oblong, conſiſting of one leaf, which opens towards the top, and is divided into two lips; the uppermoſt of which is ſubdivided into two, and the lowermoſt is cut into many ſegments; the tube of the flowers is bent, ſomewhat reſembling a huntſman's horn. They are produced in cluſters, and are very ſweet. Miller enumerates ten ſpecies, of which three grow wild in our hedges.

Bid her ſteal into the pleached bower,
Where honey-ſuckles, ripen'd by the ſun,
Forbid the ſun to enter; like to favourites,
Made proud by princes, that advance their pride
Againſt the power that bred it. Shakeſp.

Watch upon a bank
With ivy canopied, and interwove
With flaunting honey-ſuckle. Milton.

Then melſol beat and honey-ſuckles pound;
With theſe alluring ſavours ſtrew the ground. Dryd.

And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears,
To ſteal his ſweet and honied ſentences. Shakeſp.

Look now for no enchanting voice, nor fear
The bait of honey'd words; a rougher tongue

HO'NORARY. adj. [honorarius, Latin.]

1. Done in honour; made in honour.

There was probably ſome diſtinction made among the Romans between ſuch honorary arches erected to emperors, and thoſe that were raiſed to them on the account of a victory, which are properly triumphal arches. Addiſon on Italy.

This monument is only honorary, for the aſhes of the emperor lie elſewhere. Addiſon on Italy.

2. Conferring honour without gain.

The Romans abounded with little honorary rewards, that, without conferring wealth and riches, gave only place and diſtinction to the perſon who received them. Addiſon.

HO'NOUR. n. ſ. [honneur, French; honor, Latin.]

1. Dignity; high rank.

2. Reputation; fame.

A man is an ill huſband of his honour, that entereth into any action, the failing wherein may diſgrace him more than the carrying of it through can honour him. Bacon.

3. The title of a man of rank. Not now uſed.

Return unto thy lord,
Bid him not fear the ſeparated councils;
His honour and myſelf are at the one:
And at the other is my good friend Catesby. Shakeſp.

Thou happy father,
Think that the cleareſt god, who make them honours
Of man's impoſſibilities, have preſerv'd thee. Shak.

5. Nobleneſs of mind; ſcorn of meanneſs; magnanimity.

Now ſhall I ſee thy love; what motive may
Be ſtronger with thee than the name of wife?
—That which ſtandeth him, that thee upholds,
His honour, O, thine honour, Lewis, thine honour. Shakeſpeare.

If by honour is meant any thing diſtinct from conſcience, 'tis no more than a regard to the cenſure and eſteem of the world. Rogers.

6. Reverence; due veneration. To do honour is to treat with reverence.

They take thee for their mother,
And every day do honour to thy grave. Shakeſp.

His Grace of Canterbury,
Who holds his ſtate at doors, 'mongſt purſuivants.
—Ha! 'tis he indeed?
Is this the honour they do one another? Shakeſp.

This is a duty in the fifth commandment, required towards our prince and our parent, under the name of honour; a reſpect, which, in the notion of it, implies a mixture of love and fear, and, in the object, equally ſuppoſes goodneſs and power. Rogers.

7. Chaſtity.

Be ſhe honour flaw'd,
I have three daughters, the eldeſt is eleven;
If this prove true, they'll pay for't. Shakeſp.

Why should I not know my own? Dryden.

HONOURER. n. s. [from honour.] One that honours; one that regards with veneration.
I send you now Mr Cr—, whose zeal in your concerns will, I hope, endear him to your honourer. Pope.

HOOD, in composition, is derived from the Saxon hab in German heit, in Dutch heid. It denotes quality, character, condition: as, knighthood; childhood; fatherhood. Sometimes it is written after the Dutch, as maidenhead. Sometimes it is taken collectively: as, brotherhood, a confraternity: fool-hood, a company of fillers.

HOOD. n. s. [hob, Saxon, probably from hebod, head.]
1. The upper covering of a woman's head.
In velvet, whites as snow, the troop was gown'd:
Their hoods and sleeves the same. Dryden.
2. Any thing drawn upon the head, and wrapping round it.
He undertook so to muffle himself up in his hood, that none should discern him. Wotton.
The lacerna came, from being a military habit, to be a common dress: it had a hood, which could be separated from and joined to it. Arbuthnot.
3. A covering put over the hawk's eyes, when he is not to fly.
4. An ornamental fold that hangs down the back of a graduate, to mark his degree.

There are many branches of the natural law now worn obsolete in the two tables, unless hooked in by tedious consequences. Norris.

HOOKED. adj. [from hook.] Bent; curvated.
Grip'd like an eagle or vulture; from whence the epithet gripus, for an hooked or aquiline nose. Brown.
Now thou threaten'st, with unjust degree,
To seize the prize which I so dearly bought:
Mean man! to thine, for still above the rest,
The hooked crip cross hands usurp the best. Dryden.
Caterpillars have claws and feet: the claws are hooked, to take the better hold in climbing from twig to twig, and hanging on the backsides of leaves. Grew.

HOOKEDNESS. n. s. [from hooked.] State of being bent like a hook.

HOOK-NOSED. adj. [hook and nose.] Having the aquiline nose rising in the middle.

HOOP. n. s. [hoep, Dutch.]
1. Any thing circular by which something else is bound, particularly casks or barrels.
Thou shalt prove a shelter to thy friends,
A hoop of gold to bind thy brothers in,
That the united vessel of their blood
Shall never leak. Shakesp. Henry IV.
If I knew
What hoop would hold us staunch, from edge to edge
O'th' world, I would pursue it. Shakesp.
A quarrel, ho, already! what's the matter?
—About a hoop of gold, a paltry ring. Shakesp.
To view so lewd a town, and to refrain,
What hoops of iron could my spleen contain! Dryd.
And learned Athens to our art must stoop,
Could they behold us tumbling through a hoop. Pope.
2. The

2. The whalebone with which women extend their petticoats; a farthingale.
At coming in you saw her hoop.
The entry hush'd against her hoop. Swift.
All that hoops are good for is to clean dirty shoes, and to keep fellows at a distance. Clarissa.
3. Any thing circular.
I have seen at Rome an antique statue of Time, with a wheel or hoop of marble in his hand. Addison.

To HOOP. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To bind or enclose with hoops.
The three hoop'd pot shall have ten hoops, and I will make it felony to drink small beer. Shakesp.

Their hoods, their cloaks, and get them gone. Swift.

3. To covet up in haste.

4. To perform in a hurry.

I have given much application to this poem: this is not a play huddled up in haste. Dryden.

When continu'd rain
The lab'ring husband in his house restrain,
Let him forecast his work with timely care,
Which else is huddled when the skies are fair. Dryden

5. To throw together in confusion.

Our adversary huddling several suppositions together, and that in doubtful and general terms, makes a medley and confusion. Locke.

To HUDDLE. v. n. To come in a crowd or hurry.

Glance an eye of pity on his losses,
That have of late so huddled on his back,
Enough to press a royal merchant down. Shak.

Brown answered after his blunt and huddling manner. Bacon.

Thyrsis, whose artful strains have oft delay'd
The huddling brook to hear his madrigal,
And sweeten'd every muskrose of the dale. Milton.

Their eyes are more imperfect than others; for they will run against things, and huddling forwards, fall from high places. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

HUDDLE. n. s. [from the verb.] Crowd; tumult; confusion; with obscurity.

That the Aristotelian philosophy is a huddle of words and terms insignificant, has been the censure of the wisest. Glanv.

To change the die with distant view. Dryden.

2. [Huer French.] A clamour; a legal pursuit; an alarm given to the country. It is commonly joined with cry.

Hue and cry, villain, go! Assist me, knight I am undone: fly, run, hue and cry! villain, I am undone. Shakesp.

Immediately comes a hue and cry after a gang of thieves, that had taken a purse upon the road. L'Estrange.

If you should hiss, he swears he'll hiss as high;
And like a culprit, join the hue and cry. Addison.

The hue and cry went after Jack, to apprehend him dead or alive, where he could be found. Arbuthnot's John Bull.

HUER. n. s. [huer, French, to cry.] One whose business is to call out to others.

They lie hovering upon the coast, and are directed by a balker or huer, who standeth on the cliff-side, and from thence discerneth the course of the pilchard. Carew's Survey.

HUFF. n. s. [from houve, or hoven, swelled: he is huffed up by distempers. So in some provinces we still say the bread huffs up, when it begins to heave, or ferment: huff, therefore, may be ferment. To be in a huff is then to be in a ferment, as we now speak.]

1. Swell or sudden anger or arrogance.

Quoth Ralpho, honour's but a word,
To swear by, only in a lord;
In others it is but a huff
To vapour with instead of proof. Hudibras.

His frowns kept multitudes in awe,
Before the bluster of whose huff
All hats, as in a storm, flew off. Hudibras.

We have the apprehensions of a change to keep a check upon us in the very huff of our greatness. L'Estrange.

1. To swell; to puff.

In many wild birds the diaphragm may easily be huffed up with air, and blown in at the windpipe. Grew.

2. To hector; to treat with insolence and arrogance, or brutality.

The commissioner at Magdalen college said to Dr. Hough, You must not presume to huff us. Richard.

To HUFF. v. n. To bluster; to storm; to bounce, to swell with indignation or pride.

A huffing, shining, flatt'ring, cringing coward,
A cankerworm of peace, was rais'd above him. Otway.

A thief and justice fool and knave,
A huffing officer and slave. Hudibras.

Huffing to cowards, fawning to the brave,
To knaves a fool, to cred'lous fools a knave. Roscommon

This senseless arrogant conceit of theirs made them huff at the doctrine of repentance, as a thing below them. South.

Now what's his end? O charming glory say!
What, a fifth act to crown his huffing play? Dryd.

What a small pittance of reason and truth is mixed with those huffing opinions they are swelled with. Locke.

When Peg received John's message, she huffed and stormed like the devil. Arbuth. Hist. of J. Bull.

And firſt her huſband on the poop eſpies. Dryden.

If they ſlip eaſily, and are of a fit ſize to be agitated by heat, and the heat is big enough to keep them in agitation, the body is fluid; and if it be apt to ſtick to things, it is humid. Newton's Opticks.

HUMI'DITY. n. ſ. [humidité, French; from humid.] That quality which we call moiſture, or the power of wetting other bodies. It differs very much from fluidity, depending altogether on the congruity of the component particles of any liquor to the pores or ſurfaces of ſuch particular bodies as it is capable of adhering to. Thus quickſilver is not a moiſt liquor, in reſpect to our hands or clothes, and many other things it will not ſtick to; but it may be called ſo in reference to gold, tin, or lead, to whoſe ſurfaces it will preſently adhere. And even water itſelf that wets almoſt every thing, and is the great ſtandard of humidity, is not capable of wetting every thing, for it ſtands and runs eaſily off in globular drops on the leaves of cabbages and many other plants; and it will not wet the feathers of ducks, ſwans, and other water-fowl. Quincy.

We'll uſe this unwholeſome humidity, this groſs watry pumpion. Shakeſpeare.

O bleſſing-breeding ſun ward from the earth,
Rotten humidity below thy ſiſter's orb
Infect the air! Shakeſpeare's Timon of Athens.

HU'MOROUS. adj. [from humour.]

1. Full of groteſque or odd images.

Some of the commentators tell us, that Marſya was a lawyer who had loſt his cauſe; others that this paſſage alludes to the ſtory of the ſatire Marſyas, who contended with Apollo, which I think is more humorous. Addiſon on Italy.

2. Capricious; irregular; without any rule but the preſent whim.

I am known to be a humorous patrician; ſaid to be ſomething imperfect, in favouring the firſt complaint; haſty and under-like, upon too trivial motion. Shakeſpeare's Coriolanus.

Thou fortune's champion, that do'ſt never fight
But when her humorous ladyſhip is by,
To teach thee ſafety. Shakeſp. King John.

He's humorous as Winter, and as ſudden
As flaws congeal'd in the ſpring of day.
Shakeſp. Henry IV.

O, you awake then: come away,
Times be ſhort, are made for play;
The humorous moon too will not ſtay:
What doth make you thus delay? Ben Jonſon.

Shall I call
Antiquity from the old schools of Greece,
To testify the arms of chastity?
Hence had the huntress Dian her dread bow,
Fair silver-shafted queen, for ever chaste. Milton.

Let old Arcadia boast her ample plain,
Th' immortal huntress, and her virgin train;
Nor envy Windsor. Pope.

Homer represents Diana with her quiver at her shoulder; but at the same time he describes her as an huntress. Broome.

HU'NTSMAN. n. s. [hunt and man.]

Which gape and rub the elbow at the news
Of hurlyburly innovation. Shakespeare.

Methinks, I see this hurly all on foot. Shakesp.

All places were filled with tumult and hurlyburly, every man measured the danger by his own fear; and such a pitiful cry was in every place, and in cities presently to be besieged. Knolles.

HU'RRICANE. HU'RRICANO. n. s. [huracan, Spanish; ouragan, Fr.] A violent storm, such as is often experienced in the western hemisphere.

Blow winds, and crack your cheeks;
Your cataracts and hurricanoes spout! Shakespeare.

A storm or hurricane, though but the force of air, makes a strange havock where it comes. Burnet.

A poet who had a great genius for tragedy, made every man and woman too in his plays stark raging mad: all was tempestuous and blustering; heaven and earth were coming together in every word; a mere hurricane from the beginning to the end. Dryd.

The ministers of state, who gave us law,
In corners with selected friends withdraw;
There, in dead murmurs, solemnly are wise,
Whisp'ring like winds, ere hurricanes arise. Dryden.

So, where our wide Numidian wastes extend,
Sad lords th' imperious hurricanes descend,
Wheel through the air, in circling eddies play,
Tear up the sands, and sweep whole plains away.
Addison.

HYDRO'PHOBIA. n. ſ. [ὑδροφοβία; hydrophobie, Fr.] Dread of water.

Among thoſe diſmal ſymptoms that follow the bite of a mad dog, the hydrophobia, or dread of water is the moſt remarkable. Quincy.

HYDROPICAL. } adj. [ὑδεροπικὸς; hydropique, Fr. from hydrops, Latin.]
HYDROPICK. }

1. Dropſical; diſeaſed with extravaſated water.

Cantharides heat the watery parts of the body; as urine, and hydropical water. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt.

The world's whole ſap is ſunk:
The general balm the hydropick earth hath drunk. Donne.

Hydropical ſwellings, if they be pure, are pellucid. Wiſeman.

Hydropick wretches by degrees decay,
Growing the more, the more they waſte away;
By their own ruins they augmented lye,
With thirſt and heat amidſt a deluge try. Blackmore.

One ſort of remedy he uſes in dropſies, the water of the hydropicks. Arbuthnot.

2. Reſembling dropſy.

Some men's hydropick inſatiableneſs learned to thirſt the more, by how much more they drank. King Charles.

Every luſt is a kind of hydropick diſtemper, and the more we drink the more we ſhall thirſt. Tillotſon.

HYDROSTA'TICAL. adj. [ὕδωρ and ſtatick.] Relating to hydroſtaticks; taught by hydroſtaticks.

A human body forming in ſuch a fluid, will never be reconcileable to this hydroſtatical law: there will be always ſomething lighter beneath, and ſomething heavier above; becauſe bone, the heavieſt in ſpecie, will be ever in the midſt. Bentley.

HYDROSTA'TICALLY. adv. [from hydroſtatical.] According to hydroſtaticks.

The weight of all bodies around the earth is ever proportional to the quantity of their matter: for inſtance, a pound weight, examined hydroſtatically, doth always contain an equal quantity of ſolid mass. Bentley.

HYDROSTA'TICKS. n. ſ. ὕδωρ and ſtatick; hydroſtatique, Fr.] The ſcience of weighing fluids; weighing bodies in fluids.

HYDRO'TICK. n. ſ. [ὕδωρ; hydrotique, Fr.] Purger of water or phlegm.

HYE'NA. } n. ſ. hyene, Fr. hyæna, Lat.]
HYE'NA. } An animal like a wolf, ſaid fabulouſly to imitate human voices.

I will weep when you are diſpoſed to be merry; I will laugh like a hyen, when you are inclined to ſleep. Shakeſpeare.

A wonder more amazing would we find,
Th' hyena ſhews it, of a double kind:
Varying the ſexes in alternate years,
In one begets, and in another bears. Dryden's Fables.

The hyena was indeed well joined with the bever, as having alſo a bag in thoſe parts, if thereby we underſtand the hyena odorata, or civet cat. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The keen hyena, fellieſt of the fell. Thomſon.

HYGROMETER. n. ſ. [ὑγρὸς and μετρέω; hygrometre, Fr.] An inſtrument to meaſure the degrees of moiſture.

The ſuitors heard, and deem'd the mirthful voice
A ſignal of her hymeneal choice. Pope's Odyſſey.

HYMN. n. ſ. [hymne, Fr. ὕμνος.] An encomiaſtick ſong, or ſong of adoration to ſome ſuperior being.

At I earſt, in praiſe of mine own dame,
So now in honour of thy mother dear,
An honourable hymn I eke ſhould frame. Spenſer.

Our ſolemn hymns to ſullen dirges change;
Our bridal flow'rs ſerve for a buried coarſe. Shakeſ.

When ſteel grows
Soft as the paraſite's ſilk, let hymns be made
An overture for the wars. Shakeſpeare's Coriolanus.

There is an hymn ſung; but the ſubject of it is always the praiſes of Adam, and Noah and Abraham, concluding ever with a thankſgiving for the nativity of our Saviour. Bacon.

Farewell, ye happy ſhades,
Where angels firſt ſhould practiſe hymns, and ſtring
Their tuneful harps, when they to heav'n would ſing. Dryden.

To HYMN. v. a. [ὑμνέω.] To praiſe in ſong; to worſhip with hymns.

Whoſe buſineſs were to ſerve the Lord
High up in heav'n, with ſongs to hymn his throne. Milton.

To HYMN. v. n. To ſing ſongs of adoration.

They touch'd their golden harps, and hymning prais'd
God and his works. Milton.

He had not left alive this patient ſaint,
This anvil of affronts, but ſent him hence,
To hold a peaceful branch of palm above,
And hymn it in the quire. Dryden's Spaniſh Friar.

HY'MNICK. adj. [ὑμνικὸς.] Relating to hymns.

He rounds the air, and breaks the hymnick notes
In birds, heav'n's choriſters, organick throats,
Which, if the whole ſtrain did, may ſeem to be
A tenth rank in the heavenly hierarchy. Donne.

To HYP. v. a. [barbarouſly contracted from hypochondriack.] To make melancholy, to diſpirit.

I have been of the laſt degree, to hyp Have you. Spectator.

HY'PALLAGE. n. ſ. [ὑπαλλαγὴ.] A figure by which words change their caſes with each other.

HYPER. n. ſ. [A word barbarouſly curtailed by Pope from hypercritick.] A hypercritick; one more critical than neceſſity requires. Pope did not know the meaning of the word.

Critics lived on other men,
And hypers upon them again. Prior.

HYPE'RBOLA. n. ſ. (hyperbole, Fr. ὑπὲρ and βάλλω.] In geometry, a ſection of a cone made by a plane, ſo that the axis of the ſection inclines to the oppoſite leg of the cone, which in the parabola is parallel to it, and in the ellipſis interſects it. The axis of the hyperbolical ſection will meet alſo with the oppoſite ſide of the cone, when produced above the vertex. Harris.

Had the velocities of the ſeveral planets been greater or leſs than they are, or had their diſtances from the ſun, or the quantity of the ſun's matter, and conſequently his attractive power been greater or leſs than they are now, with the ſame velocities, they would not have revolved in concentrick circles, but have moved in hyperbolas very eccentrick. Bentley.

HY'PERBOLE. n. ſ. [hyperbole, Fr. ὑπερβολὴ.] A figure in rhetorick by which any thing is increaſed or diminiſhed beyond the exact truth: as, he runs faſter than lightning. His poſſeſſions are fallen to duſt. He was ſo gaunt, the caſe of a flagellet was a manſion for him. Shakeſp.

Terms unſquar'd
Which, from the tongue of roaring Typhon dropt,
Would ſeem hyperboles. Shake. Troilus and Creſſida.

Taffata phraſes, ſilken terms preciſe,
Three pil'd hyperboles, ſpruce affectation,
Figures pedantical, theſe Summer flies,
Have blown me full of maggot oſtentation. Shakeſp.

They were above the hyperboles, that fond poetry beſtows upon its admired objects. Glanville.

Hyperboles,

Hyperboles, ſo daring and ſo bold,
Diſdaining bounds, are yet by rules control'd;
Above the clouds, but yet within our ſight,
They mount with truth, and make a tow'ring flight.
Granville.

The common people underſtand raillery, or at leaſt rhetorick, and will not take hyperboles in too literal a ſenſe. Swift.

HYPERBO'LICAL. } adj. [hyperbolique, Fr.
HYPERBO'LICK. } from hyperbola, Lat.]

1. Belonging to the hyperbola; having the nature of an hyperbola.

Cancellated in the middle with ſquares, with triangles before, and behind with hyperbolick lines. Grew's Muſæum.

The horny or pellucid coat of the eye riſeth up, as a hillock, above the convexity of the white of the eye, and is of an hyperbolical or parabolical form. Ray on the Creation.

2. [From hyperbole.] Exaggerating or exceeding, beyond fact.

It is probable, and probably hyperbolical, and to be taken not to the ſtrict ſenſe. Boyle.

HYPERBO'LICALLY. adv. [from hyperbolical.]

1. In form of an hyperbola.

2. With a groſſer exaltation or extenuation.

Theſe, if we take it hyperbolically. Brown.

The blood moving too ſlowly through the celiack and melenterick arteries, produces various complaints in the lower bowels and hypochondres; from whence ſuch perſons are called hypochondriack. Arbuthnot.

HYPOCHONDRI'ACAL. } adj. hypocondria-
HYPOCHONDRI'ACK. } que, Fr. from hypochondres.]

1. Melancholy; diſordered in the imagination.

Socrates laid down his life in atteſtation of that moſt fundamental truth, the belief of one God; and yet he's not recorded either as fool or hypochondriack. Decay of Piety.

2. Producing melancholy; having the nature of melancholy.

Cold ſweats are many times mortal, and always ſuſpected; as in great fears, and hypochondriacal paſſions, being a relaxation or forſaking of the ſpirits. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

HY'POCIST. n. ſ. [ὑποκίστις; hypociſte, Fr.]

Hypociſt is an inſpiſſated juice conſiderably hard and heavy, of a fine ſhining black colour, when broken. The ſtem of the plant is thick and fleſhy; and much thicker at the top than towards the bottom. The fruits contain a tough glutinous liquor, gathered before they are ripe: the juice is expreſſed, then formed into cakes. Hill.

HYPO'CRISY. n. ſ. [hypocriſie, French, ὑπόκρισις.] Diſſimulation with regard to the moral or religious character.

Next ſtood hypocriſy with holy leer,
Soft ſmiling and demurely looking down;
But hid the dagger underneath the gown. Dryden.

Hypocriſy is much more eligible than open infidelity and vice: it wears the livery of religion, and avoids the ſcandal: nay, continued diſguiſes are too great a conſtraint: men would leave off their vices, rather than undergo the toil of practiſing them to perfect. Swift.

HY'POCRITE. n. ſ. [hypocrite, French; ὑποκριτὴς.]

1. A diſſembler in morality or religion.

He heartily prays ſome occaſion may detain us longer: I dare ſwear he is no hypocrite, but prays from his heart. Shakſp.

A wiſe man hateth not the law; but he that is an hypocrite therein, is as a ſhip in a ſtorm. Eccluſ. xxxiii. 3.

Fair hypocrite, you ſeek to cheat in vain;
Your ſilence argues, you alk time to feign. Dryden.

The making religion neceſſary to intereſt might increaſe hypocriſy; but if one in twenty ſhould be brought to true piety, and nineteen be only hypocrites, the advantage would ſtill be great. Swift.

2. A diſſembler.

Beware, ye honeſt: the third curling glaſs
Suffices virtue, but may hypocrites,
Who daily ſpeak one thing, another think,
Hateful as hell, ſtill plead'd unwarn'd drink on,
And through intemp'rance grow a while ſincere. Phillips.

HYPOCRI'TICAL. } adj. [from hypocrite.]
HYPOCRI'TICK. } Diſſembling; inſincere; appearing differently from the reality.

Now you are confeſſing your enormities; I know it by that hypocritical, down-caſt look. Dryden.

Whatever virtues may appear in him, they will be eſteemed an hypocritical impoſture on the world; and in his retired pleaſures, he will be preſumed a libertine. Rogers.

Let others ſhew their hypocritick face. Swift.

HYPOCRI'TICALLY. adv. [from hypocritical.] With diſſimulation; without ſincerity; falſely.

Simeon and Levi ſpake not only falſely, but infidiouſly, nay hypocritically, abuſing at once their proſelytes and their religion. Gov. of the Tongue.

1. Diſtinct ſubſtance.

2. Perſonality. A term uſed in the doctrine of the Holy Trinity.

The oneneſs of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, referring to the ſeveral hypoſtaſes in the one eternal, indiviſible, divine-nature, and the eternity of the Son's generation, and his co-eternity and conſubſtantiality with the Father, are aſſertions equivalent to thoſe compriſed in the ancient ſimple article. Hammond.

HYPOSTA'TICAL. adj. [hypoſtatique, Fr. from hypoſtaſis.]

1. Conſtitutive; conſtituent as diſtinct ingredients.

Let our Carneades, warn men not to ſubſcribe to the grand doctrine of the chymiſts, touching their three hypoſtatical principles, till they have a little examined it. Boyle.

2. Perſonal; diſtinctly perſonal.

HYPOTENU'SE. n. ſ. [hypotenuſe, Fr. ὑποτείνουσα.] The line that ſubtends the right angle of a right-angled triangle; the ſubtenſe.

The ſquare of the hypotenuſe in a right-angled triangle, is equal to the ſquares of the two other ſides. Locke.

HYPO'THESIS. n. ſ. [hypotheſe, Fr. ὑπόθεσις.] A ſuppoſition; a ſyſtem formed upon ſome principle not proved.

The mind calls and takes itſelf reſtleſly from one thing to another, till at length it brings all the ends of a long and various hypotheſis together; ſees how one part coherres with another, and ſo clears off all the appearing contrarieties that ſeemed to lie croſs, and make the whole unintelligible. South.

With imagin'd ſovereignty
Lord of his new hypotheſis he reigns:
He reigns: how long? till ſome uſurper riſe:
And he too, mighty thoughtful, mighty wiſe,
Studies new lines, and other circles feigns. Prior.

HYPOTHE'TICAL. } adj. [hypothetique, Fr.
HYPOTHE'TICK. } from hypotheſis.] Including a ſuppoſition; conditional.

Conditional or hypothetical propoſitions are thoſe whoſe parts are united by the conditional particle if, as, if the ſun be fixed, the earth muſt move. Watts.

HYPOTHE'TICALLY. adv. [from hypothetical.] Upon ſuppoſition; conditionally.

The only part liable to imputation is calling her a goddeſs, yet this is propoſed with modeſty and doubt, and hypothetically. Broome.

HYSTE'RICKS. n. ſ. [ὑστερικὸς.] Fits of women, ſuppoſed to proceed from diſorders in the womb.

I.

I. Is in Engliſh conſidered both as a vowel and conſonant; though, ſince the vowel and conſonant differ in their form as well as ſound, they may be more properly accounted two letters.

I vowel has a long ſound, as fine, thine, which is uſually marked with an e final; and a ſhort ſound, as fin, thin. Prefixed to e it makes a dipthong of the ſame ſound with the ſoft i, or double e, ee: thus field, yield, are ſpoken as feeld, yeeld; except friend, which is ſpoken frend. Subjoined to a or e it makes them long, as fail, neigh; and to o makes a mingled ſound, which approaches more nearly to the true notion of a dipthong, or ſound compoſed of the ſounds of two vowels, than any other combination of vowels in the Engliſh language, as oil, coin. The ſound of i before another i, and at the end of a word is always expreſſed by y.

J conſonant has invariably the ſame ſound with that of g in giant, as jaue, jet, jilt, jolt, juſt.

I. Pronoun perſonal. [ik, Gothick; ic, Saxon; ich, Dutch.

I, gen. me; plural we; gen. us.

ic me, pe, up.

I do not like theſe ſeveral councils, I. Shakeſp.

There is none greater in this houſe than I. Gen. xxxix. 9.

Be of good cheer, it is I: be not afraid. Mat. xiv. 27.

What ſhall I do to be for ever known,
And make thy age to come my own;
I ſhall like beaſts to common people dye,
Unleſs you write my elegy. Cowley.

Hence, and make room for me. Cowley.

When chance of buſineſs parts us two,
What do our ſouls, I wonder, do? Cowley.

Thus, having paſs'd the night in fruitleſs pain,
I to my longing friends return again. Dryden's Æn.

Of night impatient we demand the day,
The day arrives, and for the night we pray. Blackmore.

2. Me is in the following paſſage written for I.

There is but one man whom ſhe can have, and that is me. Clariſſa.

3. I is more than once in Shakeſpeare written for ay, or yes.

Hath Romeo ſlain himſelf? Say thou but I,
And that bare vowel, I, ſhall poiſon more
Than the death darting eye of cockatrice. Shakeſp.

Did your letters pierce the queen?
— I, ſir; ſhe took 'em and read 'em in my preſence,
And now and then an ample tear trill'd down. Shak.

To JA''BBER. v. n. [gableren, Dutch.] To talk idly; to prate without thinking; to chatter.

A thouſand raw tricks of theſe bragging Jacks,
Which I will practiſe. Shakeſp. Mereh. of Venice.

Every Jack ſlave has his belly-full of fighting, and I muſt go up and down like a cook that nobody can match. Shakeſpeare.

The name of inſtruments which ſupply the place of a boy, as an inſtrument to pull off boots.

Foot-boys, who had frequently the common name of jack given them, were kept to turn the ſpit, or to pull off their maſters boots; but when inſtruments were invented for both thoſe ſervices, they were both called jacks. Watts's Logick.

3. An engine which turns the ſpit.

The excellencies of a good jack are, that the jack frame be forged and filed ſquare; that the wheels be perpendicularly and ſtrongly fixed on the ſquares of the ſpindles; that the teeth be evenly cut, and well ſmoothed; and that the teeth of the worm-wheel fall evenly into the groove of the worm. Moxon.

The ordinary jacks, uſed for roaſting of meat, commonly conſiſt but of three wheels. Wilkins.

A cookmaid, by the fall of a jack weight upon her head, was beaten down. Wiſeman's Surgery.

Some ſtrain in rhyme; the muſes on their racks
Scream, like the winding of ten thouſand jacks. Pope.

4. A young pike.

No fiſh will thrive in a pond where roach or gudgeons are, except jacks. Mortimer's Huſbandry.

5. [Jacque, Fr.] A coat of mail.

The reſidue were on foot, well furniſhed with jack and ſkull, pike, dagger, bucklers made of board, and ſlicing ſwords, broad, thin, and of an excellent temper. Hayward.

6. A cup of waxed leather.

Dead wine, that ſtinks of the borrachio, ſup
From a foul jack, or greaſy maple cup. Dryden.

7. A ſmall bowl thrown out for a mark to the bowlers.

'Tis as if one ſhould ſay, that a bowl equally poiſed, and thrown upon a plain bowling-green, will run neceſſarily in a direct motion; but if it be made with a byaſs, that may decline it a little from a ſtraight line, it may acquire a liberty of will, and ſo run ſpontaneouſly to the jack. Bentley.

8. A part of the muſical inſtrument called a virginal.

In a virginal, as ſoon as ever the jack falleth, and toucheth the ſtring, the ſound ceaſeth. Bacon.

Every jack pudding will be ridiculing palpable weakneſſes which they ought to cover. L'Eſtrange.

A buffoon is called by every nation by the name of the diſh they like beſt: in French jean pottage, and in Engliſh jack pudding. Guardian.

Jack pudding, in his party-colour'd jacket,
Toſſes the glove, and jokes at every packet. Gray.

JACK with a Lantern. An ignis fatuus.

JACAL'ENT. n. ſ. [Jack in Lent, a poor ſtarved fellow.] A ſimple ſheepiſh fellow.

You little jackalent, have you been true to us?
— Ay, I'll be ſworn. Shak. Merry Wives of Windſ.

JACKA'L. n. ſ. [chacal, Fr.] A ſmall animal ſuppoſed to ſtart prey for the lion.

The Belgians tack upon our rear,
And raking chaſe-guns through our ſterns they ſend:
Cloſe by their breſthips, like jackals appear,
Who on their lions for the prey attend. Dryden.

The mighty lion, before whom ſtood the little jackal, the faithful ſpy of the king of beaſts. Arbuthnot and Pope.

JA'CKNAPES. n. ſ. [jack and ape.]

1. Monkey; an ape.

2. A coxcomb; an impertinent.

Which is he?
That jackanapes with ſcarfs. Shakeſpeare.

People wonder'd how ſuch a young upſtart jackanapes ſhould grow ſo pert and ſaucy, and take ſo much upon him. Arb.

JACKDA'W. n. ſ. [jack and daw.] A cock daw; a bird taught to imitate the human voice.

To impoſe on a child to get by heart a long ſcroll of phraſes, without any ideas, is a practice fitter for a jackdaw than for any thing that wears the ſhape of man. Watts.

JA'CKET. n. ſ. [jacquet, Fr.]

1. A ſhort coat; a cloſe waiſtcoat.

In a blue jacket, with a croſs of red. Hubb. Tale.

And

And hens, and dogs, and hogs are feeding by;
And here a sailor's jacket hangs to dry. Pope.

2. To beat one's JACKET, is to beat the man.

JACTITA'TION. n. s. [jactito, Lat.]

1. Tossing; motion; restlessness; heaving.

If the patient be surprised with jactitation, or great oppression about the stomach, expect no relief from cordials. Harvey.

2. A term in the canon law for a false pretension to marriage.

JACULA'TION. n. s. [jaculatio, jaculor, Latin.] The act of throwing missive weapons.

So hills amid' the air encounter'd hills,
Hurl'd to and fro with jaculation dire. Milton.

JADE. n. s. [The etymology of this word is doubtful: Skinner derives it from gaad, a goad or spur.]

1. A horse of no spirit; a hired horse; a worthless nag.

Alas, what wights are these that load my heart!
I am as dull as Winter-starved sheep,
Tir'd as a jade in overloaden cart. Sidney.
When they should endure the bloody spur,
They fall their crest, and, like deceitful jades,
Sink in the trial. Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.

The horsemen sit like fixed candlesticks,
With torch-staves in their hand; and their poor jades
Lob down their heads, dropping the head and hips.
Shakespeare.

So have I seen with armed heel,
A wight bestride a commonweal,
While still the more he kick'd and spurr'd,
The lets the sul'len jade has stirr'd. Hudibras.

The plain men came upon the trial to prove those to be jades that made sport with him. L'Estrange.

False steps but help them to renew their race,
As, after stumbling, jades will mend their pace.
Pope.

2. A sorry woman. A word of contempt noting sometimes age, but generally vice.

Shall these, these old jades, put the flower
Of youth, that you have, pass you. Coapman.
But she, the cunning'st jade alive,
Says, 'tis the ready way to thrive. Stepney.

Get in, hussy: now will I personate this young jade, and discover the intrigue. Southern.

In diamonds, pearl, and rich brocade,
She shines the last of batter'd jades,
And flutters in her pride. Swift.

3. A young woman: in irony and slight contempt.

You see now and then some handsome young jades among them: the sluts have very often white teeth and black eyes. Addison.

JADE. n. s. A species of stone.

The jade is a species of the jasper, and of extreme hardness. Its colour is composed of a pale blueish grey, or ash-colour, and a pale-green, not uniform. It appears dull and coarse on the surface, but it takes a very elegant polish. It is used by the Turks for handles of sabres. Hill.

To JADE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To tire; to harass; to dispirit; to weary: applied originally to horses.

With his banners, and his well-paid ranks,
The ne'er-yet-beaten horse of Parthia
We've jaded out o' th' field. Shak. Ant. and Cleo.

It is good in discourse to vary and intermingle speech of the present occasion with arguments; for it is a dull thing to tire and jade any thing too far. Bacon.

If fleet dragon's progeny at last
Proves jaded, and in frequent matches cast
No favour for the stallion we retain,
And no respect for the degen'rate strain. Dryden.

The mind once jaded, by an attempt above its power, is very hardly brought to exert its force again. Locke.

There are seasons when the brain is overtired or jaded with study or thinking; and upon some other accounts animal nature may be languid or cloudy, and unfit to assist the spirit in meditation. Watts.

2. To overbear; to crush; to degrade; to harass, as a horse that is ridden too hard.

If we live thus tamely,
To be thus jaded by a piece of scarlet,
Farewell nobility. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

3. To employ in vile offices.

The honourable blood
Must not be shed by such a jaded groom. Shakesp.

4. To ride; to rule with tyranny.

I do not now fool myself, to let imagination jade me, for every reason excites to this. Shakesp.

To JADE. v. n. To lose spirit; to sink.

Many offer at the effects of friendship, but they do not last: they are promising in the beginning, but they fail and jade and tire in the prosecution. South.

JA'DISH. adj. [from jade.]

1. Vitious: bad, as an horse.

That hors'd us on their backs, to show us
A jadish trick at last, and throw us. Hudibras.
When once the people get the jadish trick
Of throwing off their king, no ruler's safe. Southern.

2. Unchaste; incontinent.

'Tis to no boot to be jealous of a woman; for if the humour take her to be jadish, not all the locks and spies in nature can keep her honest. L'Estrange.

To JAGG. v. a. [gagan, slits or holes, Welsh.] To cut into indentures; to cut into teeth like those of a saw.

Some leaves are round, some long, some square, and many jagged on the sides. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The jagging of pinks and gillyflowers is like the inequality of oak leaves; but they never have any small plain parts. Bacon.

The banks of that sea must be jagged and torn by the impetuous assaults, or the silent underminings of waves; violent rains must wash down earth from the tops of mountains. Burnet.

An alder-tree is one among the lesser trees, whose younger branches are soft, and whose leaves are jagged. Watts.

JAGG. n. s. [from the verb.] A protuberance or denticulation.

The figure of the leaves is divided into so many jaggs or escallops, and curiously indented round the edges. Ray.

Take off all the staring straws, twigs, and jaggs in the hive, and make them as smooth as possible. Mortimer's Husbandry.

JA'GGY. adj. [from jagg.] Uneven; denticulated.

His tow'ring crest was glorious to behold;
His shoulders and his sides were scal'd with gold,
Three tongues he brandish'd when he charg'd his foes;
His teeth stood jaggy in three dreadful rows. Addison.

Amid' those angles, infinitely dreamt'd,
Thou joyful leave them jaggy salts behind. Thomson.

JA'GGEDNESS. n. s. [from jagged.] The state of being denticulated; unevenness.

First draw rudely your leaves, making them plain, before you give them their veins or jagg'dness.
Peacham on Drawing.

JAIL. n. s. [geol, Fr.] A gaol; a prison; a place where criminals are confined. See GAOL. It is written either way; but commonly by latter writers jail.

Away with the dotard, to the jail with him.
Shakespeare.

A dependant upon him paid six thousand pounds ready money, which, poor man, he lived to repent in a jail. Clarendon.

He sigh'd and turn'd his eyes, because he knew
'Twas but a larger jail he had in view. Dryden.

One jail did all their criminals restrain,
Which now the walls of Rome can scarce contain
Dryden.

JA'ILBIRD. n. s. [jail and bird.] One who has been in a jail.

JA'ILER. n. s. [from jail.] A gaoler; the keeper of a prison.

Seeking many means to speak with her, and ever kept from it, as well because she shunned it, fearing and disdaining his mind, as because of her jealous jailers. Sidney.

This is a jailer, to bring forth
Some monstrous malefactor. Shakespeare.

His pow'r to hollow caverns is confin'd;
There let him reign, the jailer of the wind;
With hoarse command he breathing subjects call,
And boast and bluster in his empty hall. Dryden.

Palamon, the prisoner knight,
Restless for woe, arose before the light;
And, with his jailer's leave, desir'd to breathe
An air more welcome than the damp beneath. Dryd.

JA'KES. n. s. [Of uncertain etymology.] A house of office.

I will tread this unbolted villain into mortar, and daub the walls of jakes with him. Shakesp.

Then sordid avarice rakes
In excrements, and hires the very jakes. Dryden.

Some have filched the very jakes for papers left there by men of wit. Swift.

JA'LAP. n. s. [jalap, French; jalapium, low Latin.]

Jalap is a firm and solid root, of a wrinkled surface, and generally cut into slices, heavy and hard to break; of a faintish smell, and of an acrid and nauseous taste. It had its name jalapium, or jalapa, from Xalapa, a town in New Spain, in the neighbourhood of which it was discovered, though it is now principally brought from the Madeiras. It is an excellent purgative where serous humours are to be evacuated. Hill's Mat. Med.

JAM. n. s. [I know not whence derived.] A conserve of fruits boiled with sugar and water.

JAMB. n. s. [jambe, French, a leg.] Any supporter on either side, as the posts of a door.

Number is to be laid within twelve inches of the forehead of the chimney jamb. Moxon.

IAMBICK. n. s. [iambique, Fr. iambicus, Lat.] Verses composed of iambick feet, or a short and long syllable alternately: used originally in satire, therefore taken for satire.

In thy false breast though venom lies,
It does but touch thy Irish pen, and dies.
Thy genius calls thee not to purchase fame
In keen iambicks, but mild anagram. Dryden.

To JA'NGLE. v. n. [sangler, French. Skinner.] To altercate, to quarrel, to bicker in words. Now a low word.

Good wits will be jangling; but, gentles agree,
This civil war of wits were much better us'd
On Navarre and his book-men. Shakespeare.

So far am I glad it did so fort,
As this there jangling I esteem a sport. Shakesp.

There is no error which hath not some appearance of probability resembling truth, which when men, who study to be singular, find out, straining reason, they then publish to the world matter of contention and jangling. Raleigh.

To JANGLE. v. a. To make to sound untunefully.

Now see that noble and that sovereign reason,
Like sweet bells jangled out of tune and harsh
Shakespeare's Hamlet.

'Ere Gothick forms were known in Greece,
And in our verse 'ere monkish rhimes
Had jangled their fantastick chimes. Prior.

JA'NGLER. n. f. [from the verb.] A wrangling, chattering, noisy fellow.

JA'NIZARY. n. f. [A Turkish word.] One of the guards of the Turkish king.

His grand vizir, presuming to invest
The chief imperial city of the West,
With the first charge compell'd in haste to rise;
The standards lost, and janizaries slain,
Render the hopes he gave his master vain. Waller.

JA'NNOCK. n. f. [probably a corruption of bannock.] Oat-bread. A northern word.

JA'NTY. adj. [corrupted from gentil, Fr.] Showy; fluttering.

This sort of woman is a janty flattern: she hangs on her cloaths, plays her head, and varies her posture. Spectator.

JA'NUARY. n. f. [Januarius, Latin.] The first month of the year, from Janus, to whom it was among the Romans consecrated.

January is clad in white, the colour of the earth at this time, blowing his nails. This month had the name from Janus, painted with two faces, signifying Providence. Peacham.

JAPA'N. n. f. [from Japan in Asia, where figured work was originally done.] Work varnished and raised in gold and colours. It is commonly used with another substantive, and therefore may be considered as an adjective.

The poor girl had broken a large japan glass, of great value, with a stroke of her brush. Swift.

To JAPA'N. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To varnish, and embellish with gold and raised figures.

For not the desk with silver nails,
Nor bureau of expence,
Nor standish well japann'd, avails
The writing of good sense. Swift.

2. To black and gloss shoes. A low phrase.

The god of fire
Among these gen'rous presents joins his part,
And aids with soot the new japanning art. Gay.

JAPA'NNER. n. f. [from japan.]

1. One skilled in japan work.
2. A shoeblacker. So called because he makes the shoes shine.

The poor have the same itch;
They change their weekly barber, weekly news,
Prefer a new japanner to their shoes. Pope's Horace.

To JAR. v. n. [from eorne, anger, Saxon; or guerre, war, French; or garren, old Teutonick, to clamour.]

1. To strike together with a kind of short rattle.

The rings of iron, that on the doors were hung,
Sent out a jarring sound, and hatefully rung. Dryden.
My knees tremble with the jarring blow. Gay.

2. To strike or sound untuneably and irregularly.

O, you kind gods!
Cure this great breach in his abused nature:
Th' untun'd and jarring senses, O, wind up,
Of this child-changed father! Shakesp. King Lear.
I perceive you delight not in musick.
—Not a whit, when it jars so. Shakespeare.
A string may jar in the best master's hand,
And the most skilful archer miss his aim. Roscommon.
He keeps his temper'd mind, serene and pure,
And every passion aptly harmonis'd
Amid' a jarring world. Thomson's Summer.

3. To clash; to interfere; to act in opposition; to be inconsistent.

At last, though long, our jarring notes agree.
Shakespeare.
For orders and degrees
Jar not with liberty, but well consist. Milton.
Venulus concludes his report:
A jarring murmur fill'd the factious court:
As when a torrent rolls with rapid race,
The flood, constrain'd within a scanty space,
Roars horrible. Dryden's Æn.

4. To quarrel; to dispute.

When those renowned noble peers of Greece,
Through stubborn pride, among themselves did jar,
Forgetful of the famous golden fleece,
Then Orpheus with his harp their strife did bar.
Spenser.
They must be sometimes ignorant of the means conducing to those ends, in which alone they can jar and oppose each other. Dryden.

JAR. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A kind of rattling vibration of sound.

In r, the tongue is held stiffly at its whole length, by the force of the muscles; so as when the impulse of breath strikes upon the end of the tongue, where it finds passage, it shakes and agitates the whole tongue, whereby the sound is affected with a trembling jar. Holder's Elements of Speech.

2. Clash of interests or opinions; discord; debate.

He maketh war, he maketh peace again,
And yet his peace is but continual jar:
O miserable men, that to him subject are!
Fairy Queen.
Nath'less, my brother, since we passed are
Unto this point, we will appease our jar. Hubberd.
Force would be right; or rather, right and wrong,
Between whose endless jar justice presides,
Would lose their names, and so would justice too.
Shakesp.

3. A state in which a door unfastened may strike the post; half opened.

The chaffering with dissenters, and dodging about this or t'other ceremony, is but like opening a few wickets, and leaving them a jar, by which no more than one can get in at a time. Swift.

4. [Guarro, Italian.] An earthen vessel.

About the upper part of the jar there appeared a good number of bubbles. Boyle.
He mead for cooling drink prepares,
Of virgin honey in the jars. Dryden.
Warriors welter on the ground,
Whilst empty jars the dire defeat resound. Garth.

JA'RDES. n. f. [French.] Hard callous tumours in horses, a little below the bending of the ham on the outside. This distemper in time will make the horse halt, and grow so painful as to cause him to pine away, and become light-bellied. It is most common to managed horses, that have been kept too much upon their haunches. Farrier's Dict.

JA'RGON. n. f. [jargon, Fr. gerigonça, Spanish.] Unintelligible talk; gabble; gibberish.

Nothing is clearer than mathematical demonstration, yet let one, who is altogether ignorant in mathematicks, hear it, and he will hold it to be plain fustian or jargon. Bramhall.
From this last toil again what knowledge flows?
Just as much, perhaps, as shows
That all his predecessor's rules
Were empty cant, all jargon of the schools. Prior.
During the usurpation an infusion of enthusiastick jargon prevailed in every writing. Swift.

JA'RGONELLE. n. f. A species of pear. See PEAR.

JA'SHAWK. n. f. [probably ias or eyas hawk.] A young hawk. Ainsworth.

JA'SMINE. n. f. [gelseminum; jasmin, Fr.] It is often pronounced jessamine.] A creeping shrub with a fragrant flower.

Thou, like the harmless bee, may'st freely range;
From jasmine grove to grove may'st wander. Thomson.

JA'SMINE Persian. n. f. A plant. A species of lilac.

JA'SPER. n. f. [jaspe, French; iaspis, Lat.] A hard stone of a bright beautiful green colour, sometimes clouded with white, found in masses of various sizes and shapes. It is capable of a very elegant polish, and is found in many parts of the East Indies, and in Egypt, Africa, Tartary, and China. Hill.

The basis of jasper is usually of a greenish hue, and spotted with red, yellow and white. Woodward.

The most valuable pillars about Rome are four columns of oriental jasper in St. Paulina's chapel, and one of transparent oriental jasper in the vatican library. Addison on Italy.

To JA'VEL, or jable. v. a. To bemire; to foil over with dirt through unnecessary traversing and travelling. This word is still retained in Scotland and the northern counties.

JA'VEL. n. f. [perhaps from the verb.] A wandering or dirty fellow.

When as time, flying with wings swift,
Expired had the term that those two javels
Should render up a reckoning of their travels. Hubb.
Sir Thomas More, preparing himself for execution, put on his best apparel, which the lieutenant compelled him to put off again, saying, That he who should have them was but a javel. What, says sir Thomas, shall I account him a javel, who shall this day do me so great a benefit? More.

JA'VELIN. n. f. [javeline, French.] A spear or half pike, which anciently was used either by foot or horse. It had an iron head pointed.

Others, from the wall, defend
With dart and javelin, stones and sulph'rous fire;
On each hand slaughter and gigantick deeds. Milt.
She shakes her myrtle javelin: and, behind,
Her Lycian quiver dances in the wind. Dryden.
Flies the javelin swifter to its mark,
Launch'd from the vigour of a Roman arm? Addis.

JA'UNDICE. n. f. [jaunisse, jaune, yellow, French.] A distemper from obstructions of the glands of the liver, which prevents the gall being duly separated by them from the blood; and sometimes, especially in hard drinkers, they are so indurated as never after to be opened, and straiten the motion of the blood so much through that viscus, as to make it divert with a force great enough into the gastrick arteries, which go off from the hepatick, to break through them, and drain into the stomach; so that vomiting of blood, in this distemper, is a fatal symptom. Quincy.

Why should a man, whose blood is warm within,
Sit like his grandsire cut in alabaster?
Sleep when he wakes, and creep into the jaundice
By being peevish? Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.
Those were thy thoughts, and thou could'st judge aright,
'Till int'rest made a jaundice in thy sight. Dryden.
The eyes of a man in the jaundice make yellow observations on every thing; and the soul, tinctured with any passion, diffuses a false colour over the appearances of things. Watts.

JA'UNDICED. adj. [from jaundice.] Infected with the jaundice.

All seems infected, that th' infected spy,
As all looks yellow to the jaundic'd eye. Pope.

To JAUNT. v. n. [janter, French.] To wander here and there; to bustle about. It is now always used in contempt or levity.

I was not made a horse,
And yet I bear a burthen like an ass;
Spur-gall'd and tir'd by jaunting Bolingbroke.
Shakespeare's Rich. II.

JAUNT. n. f. [from the verb.] Ramble; flight; excurſion. It is commonly uſed ſudicroüſly, but ſolemnly by Milton.

Our Saviour meek, and with untroubled mind,
After his airy jaunt, though hurry'd ſore,
Hungry and cold, betook him to his reſt. Milton.

He ſends me out on many a jaunt,
Old houſes in the night to haunt. Hudibras.

They parted, and away poſts the cavalier in queſt of his new miſtreſs: his firſt jaunt is to court. L'Eſtrange.

If you are for a merry jaunt, I'll try for once who can foot it fartheſt. Dryden's Spaniſh Fryar.

Thus much of the ſcheme of my deſign in this part have run over, and led my reader a long and tedious jaunt, in tracing out thoſe metallick and mineral bodies. Woodward.

JAUNTINESS. n. f. [from jaunty, or janty, corrupted from gentil, French. See JANTY.] Airyneſs; flutter; genteelneſs.

A certain ſtiffneſs in my limbs entirely deſtroyed that jauntineſs of air I was once maſter of. Addiſon.

JAW. n. f. [joue, a cheek, French; whence joowbone, or cheekbone, then jaw.]

1. The bone of the mouth in which the teeth are fixed.

A generation whoſe teeth are as ſwords, and their jaw teeth as knives, to devour the poor. Prov. xxx.

The jaw bones, hearts, and galls of pikes are very medicinable. Walton's Angler.

Piſo, who probably ſpeaks Ariſtotle's meaning, ſaid that the crocodile doth not only move his upper jaw, but that his nether jaw is immoveable. Grew.

More formidable hydra ſtands within,
Whoſe jaws with iron teeth ſeverely grin. Dryden.

2. The mouth.

My tongue cleaveth to my jaws, and thou haſt brought me into the duſt of death. Pſalm, xxii. 15.

My bended hook ſhall pierce their ſlimy jaws. Shakeſpeare.

A ſmeaty foam works o'er my gnawing jaws,
And utmoſt anguiſh ſhakes my lab'ring frame. Rowe

JAY. n. f. [named from his cry. Skinner.] A bird; praglandaria.

Two ſharp winged ſheers,
Deck'd with diverſe plumes, like painted jays,
Were fixed at his back, to cut his airy ways. Fairy Queen.

We'll uſe this unwholeſome humidity, this groſs watry pumpion—we'll teach him to know turtles from jays. Shakeſpeare.

What, is the jay more precious than the lark,
Becauſe his feathers are more beautiful? Shakeſpeare.

I am highly delighted to ſee the jay or the thruſh hopping about my walks. Spectator.

Admires the jay, the inſects gilded wings,
Or hears the hawk, when Philomela ſings. Pope.

JA'ZEL. n. f. A precious ſtone of an azure or blue colour. Dict.

ICE. n. f. [ıſ, Saxon; eyſe, Dutch.]

1. Water or other liquor made ſolid by cold.

You are no ſurer, no,
Than is the coal of fire upon the ice,
Or hailſtone in the ſun. Shakeſpeare's Coriolanus.

Thou art all ice, thy kindneſs freezes. Shakſp.

If I ſhould aſk whether ice and water were two diſtinct ſpecies of things, I doubt not but I ſhould be anſwered in the affirmative. Locke.

2. Concreted ſugar.

3. To break the ICE. To make the firſt opening to any attempt.

If you break the ice, and do this feat,
Atchieve the elder, ſet the younger free
For our acceſs, whoſe hap ſhall be to have her,
Will not ſo graceleſs be to be ingrate. Shakeſpeare

Thus have I broken the ice to invention, for the lively repreſentation of floods and rivers neceſſary for our painters and poets. Peacham on Drawing.

After he'd a while look'd wiſe,
At laſt broke ſilence and the ice. Hudibras.

To ICE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with ice; to turn to ice.

3. Unactive; not employed.

No war or battle's ſound
Was heard the world around,
The idle ſpear and ſhield were high up hung. Milt.

Children generally hate to be idle, all the care they take is, that their buſy humour ſhould be conſtantly employed in ſomething of uſe to them. Locke.

Suppoſing, among a multitude embarked in the ſame veſſel, there are ſeveral that, in a tempeſt, will rather periſh than work; would it not be madneſs in the reſt to ſtand idle, and rather chuſe to ſink than do more than comes to their ſhare? Add.

4. Uſeleſs, vain; ineffectual.

They idoliz'd, all reſiſtance loſt,
All courage; down their idle weapons dropp'd. Milton.

And threat'ning France, plac'd like a painted Jove,
Held idle thunder in his lifted hand. Dryden.

Where was then
The power that guards the ſacred lives of kings?
Why ſlept the lightning and the thunderbolts,
Or ſpent their idle rage on herbs and trees,
When vengeance call'd 'em here? Dryden.

5. Unfruitful, barren, not productive of good.

Or arms, or art, and deſarts idle,
It was my heart to ſpeak. Shakeſp. Othello.

The murmuring ſurge,
That on th' unnumber'd idle pebbles chafes,
Cannot be heard ſo high. Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

He was met even now,
Crown'd with rank fumiter and furrow weeds,
Darnel, and all the idle weeds that grow
In our ſuſtaining corn. Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

6. Trifling; of no importance: as, an idle ſtory.

Suffice it then, thou money god, quoth he,
That all thine idle offers I refuſe;
All that I need I have: what needeth me
To covet more than I have cauſe to uſe? Fairy Q.

This anſwer is both idle in regard of us, and reproachful to themſelves. Hooker.

They are not, in our eſtimation, idle reproofs, when the authors of needleſs innovations are oppoſed with ſuch negatives, as that of Leo: how are theſe new devices brought in, which our fathers never knew? Hooker.

His friend ſmil'd ſcornful, and, with proud contempt,
Rejects as idle what his fellow dreamt. Dryden.

An idle reaſon leſſens the weight of the good ones you gave before. Swift.

He wiſhes to recal the precious hours he has ſpent in trifles, and loitered away in idle unprofitable diverſions. Rogers.

To IDLE. v. n. [from the adjective.] To loſe time in lazineſs and inactivity.

Yet free from this poetick madneſs,
Next page he ſays, in ſober ſadneſs,

JEST. n. ſ. [from the verb.]

1. Any thing ludicrous, or meant only to raiſe laughter.

But is this true, or is it elſe your pleaſure,
Like pleaſant travellers, to break a jeſt
Upon the company you overtake? Shakeſpeare.

As for jeſt, there be certain things which ought to be privileged from it; namely, religion, matters of ſtate, and great perſons. Bacon.

No man ought to have the leſs reverence for the principles of religion, or for the holy ſcriptures, becauſe idle and profane wits can break jeſts upon them. Tillotſon.

He had turn'd all tragedy to jeſt. Prior.

When you the dulleſt of dull things have ſaid,
And then aſk pardon for the jeſt you made. Young.

Nigrina black, and Merdamante brown,
Vied for his love in jetty bow'rs below. Pope.

JEWEL. n. ſ. [joyaux, French; jeweelen, Dutch.]

1. Any ornament of great value, uſed commonly of ſuch as are adorned with precious ſtones.

Here, wear this jewel for me; 'tis my picture.
Shakeſpeare.

They found him dead, and caſt into the ſtreets,
An empty caſket, where the jewel, life,
By ſome damn'd hand was robb'd and ta'en away.
Shakeſpeare.

The pleaſure of the religious man is an eaſy and portable pleaſure, ſuch an one as he carries about in his boſom, without alarming either the eye or envy of the world: a man putting all his pleaſures into this one, is like a traveller's putting all his goods into one jewel. South.

2. A precious ſtone; a gem.

Jewels too, ſtones, rich and precious ſtone,
Stol'n by my daughter! Shakeſp. Merchant of Ven.

The one is too like an image, and says nothing; and the other too like my lady's eldest son, evermore talking. Shakspeare.

Thy brother I,
Even like a stony image, cold and numb. Shakesp.

The image of a deity may be a proper object for that which is but the image of a religion. South.

Still must I be upbraided with your line;
But your late brother did not prize me less,
Because I could not boast of images. Dryden.

2. An idol; a false god.

Manasseh set the carved image in God's house. Chron.

3. A copy; representation; likeness.

Long may'st thou live,
To bear his image and renew his glories! Shakesp.

I have bewept a worthy husband's death,
And liv'd by looking on his images:
But now two mirrours of his princely semblance
Are crack'd in pieces by malignant death. Shakesp.

He made us to his image all agree:
That image is the soul, and that must be,
Or not the maker's image, or be free. Dryden.

4. Semblance: show; appearance.

Deny to speak with me? They're sick, they're weary.

The image of a wicked heinous fault
Lives in his eye. Shakespeare's King John.

The face of things a frightful image bears,
And present death in various forms appears.
Dryden's Æn.

5. An idea; a representation of any thing to the mind; a picture drawn in the fancy.

The image of the jest
I'll shew you here at large. Shakspeare.

Outcasts of mortal race! can we conceive
Image of aught delightful, soft, or great? Prior.

When we speak of a figure of a thousand angles, we may have a clear idea of the number one thousand angles; but the image, or sensible idea, we cannot distinguish by fancy from the image of a figure that has nine hundred angles. Watts.

To I'MAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To copy by the fancy; to imagine.

How are immaterial substances to be imaged, which are such things whereof we can have no notion? Dryden.

Image to thy mind
How our forefathers to the Stygian shades
Went quick. Phillips.

His ear oft frighted with the imag'd voice
Of heav'n, when first it thunder'd. Prior.

Fate some future bard shall join,
In sad similitude of griefs to mine,
Condemn'd whole years in absence to deplore,
And image charms he must behold no more. Pope.

I'MAGERY. n. f. [from image.]

1. Sensible representations; pictures; statues.

Of marble stone was cut
An altar carv'd with cunning imagery. F. Q.

Th' imaginary relish is so sweet,
That it enchants my sense. Shakesp.

Fortune is nothing else but a power imaginary, to which the successes of human actions and endeavours were for their variety ascribed.
Raleigh's History.

Why wilt thou add, to all the griefs I suffer,
Imaginary ills and fancied tortures? Addison.

IMAGINA'TION. n. f. [imaginatio, Lat. imagination, Fr. from imagine.]

1. Fancy; the power of forming ideal pictures; the power of representing things absent to one's self or others.

Imagination I understand to be the representation of an individual thought. Imagination is of three kinds: joined with belief of that which is to come; joined with memory of that which is past; and of things present, or as if they were present: for I comprehend in this imagination feigned and at pleasure, as if one should imagine such a man to be in the vestments of a pope, or to have wings.
Bacon.

Our simple apprehension of corporal objects, if present, is sense; if absent, imagination: when we would perceive a material object, our fancies presents us with its idea. Glanville.

O whither shall I run, or which way fly
The sight of this so horrid spectacle,
Which erst my eyes beheld, and yet behold!
For dire imagination still pursues me. Milton.

Where beams of warm imagination play,
The memory's soft figures melt away. Pope.

2. Conception; image in the mind; idea.

Sometimes despair darkens all her imagination; sometimes the active passion of love cheers and clears her invention. Sidney.

Princes have but their titles for their glories,
An outward honour for an inward toil;
And, for unfelt imaginations,
They often feel a world of restless cares. Shak.

Better I were distract,
So should my thoughts be sever'd from my griefs;
And woes, by wrong imaginations, lose
The knowledge of themselves. Shakesp.

His imaginations were often as just as they were bold and strong. Dennis.

3. Contrivance; scheme.

Thou haſt ſeeen all their vengeance, and all their imaginations againſt me. Lam. iii. 60.

4. An unſolid or fanciful opinion.

To Ina'rch. v. a. [in and arch.]

Inarching is a method of grafting, which is commonly called grafting by approach. This method of grafting is uſed when the ſtock and the tree may be joined: take the branch you would inarch, and having fitted it to that part of the ſtock where you intend to join it, pare away the rind and wood on one ſide about three inches in length: after the ſame manner cut the ſtock or branch in the place where the graft is to be united, ſo that they may join equally together that the ſap may meet: then cut a little tongue upwards in the graft, and make a notch in the ſtock to admit it; ſo that when they are joined the tongue will prevent their ſlipping, and the graft will more cloſely unite with the ſtock. Having thus placed them exactly together, tie them, then cover the place with grafting clay, to prevent the air from entering to dry the wound, or the wet from getting in to rot the stock: you should fix a stake into the ground, to which that part of the stock, as also the graft, should be fastened, to prevent the wind from breaking them asunder. In this manner they are to remain about four months, in which time they will be sufficiently united; and the graft may then be cut from the mother-tree, observing to slope it off close to the stock, and cover the joined parts with fresh grafting clay. The operation is always performed in April or May, and is commonly practised upon oranges, myrtles, jasmines, walnuts, firs, and pines, which will not succeed by common grafting or budding. Miller.

A marvel it were, if a man of capacity could eſpy in the whole ſcripture nothing which might breed a probable opinion, that divine authority was the ſame way inclinable. Hooker.

The gall and bitterneſs of certain men's writings, who ſpared him little, made him, for their ſakes, the leſs inclinable to that truth which he himſelf ſhould have honoured. Hooker.

Deſire,
Inclinable now grown to touch or taſte,
Solicited her longing eye. Milton.

2. Having a tendency.

If ſuch a cruſt naturally fell, then it was more likely and inclinable to fall this thouſand years than the laſt; but if the cruſt was always gradually nearer and nearer to falling, that plainly evinces that it had not endured eternally. Bentley.

INCLINA'TION. n. ſ. [inclinaiſon, inclination, Fr. inclinatio, Lat.]

1. Tendency towards any point: with to.

The two rays, being equally refracted, have the ſame inclination to one another after refraction which they had before; that is, the inclination of half a degree anſwering to the ſun's diameter. Newton.

2. Natural aptneſs.

Though moſt of the thick woods are grubbed up ſince the promontory has been cultivated, there are ſtill many ſpots of it which ſhew the natural inclination of the ſoil leans that way. Addiſon.

3. Propenſion of mind; favourable diſpoſition; incipient deſire.

The king was wonderfully diſquieted, when he found that the prince was totally alienated from all thoughts of or inclination to the marriage. Clarendon.

A mere inclination to a thing is not properly a willing of that thing; and yet, in matters of duty, men frequently reckon it for ſuch: for otherwiſe how ſhould they ſo often plead and reſt in the honeſt and well inclined diſpoſition of their minds, when they are juſtly charged with an actual non-performance of the law? South.

4. Love; affection; regard. In this ſenſe it admits for.

We have had few knowing painters, becauſe of the little inclination which princes have for painting. Dryden.

'Twas long ago
Since gods came down incognito. Prior.

INCOHE'RENCE. } n. ſ. [in and coherence.]
INCOHE'RENCY. }

1. Want of coheſion; looſeneſs of material parts.

If plaister be beaten into an impalpable powder, when poured out it will emulate a liquor, by reason that the ſmallneſs and incoherence of the parts do both make them eaſy to be put into motion, and makes the pores they intercept ſo ſmall, that they interrupt not the unity or continuity of the maſs. Boyle.

3. Want of connection; incongruity; inconſequence of argument; want of dependence of one part upon another.

I find that laying the intermediate ideas naked in their due order, ſhews the incoherence of the argumentations better than ſyllogiſms. Locke.

Incoherences in matter, and ſuppoſitions without proofs, put handſomely together, are apt to paſs for ſtrong reaſon. Locke.

INCOHE'RENT. adj. [in and coherent.]

1. Wanting coheſion; looſe; not fixed to each other.

Had the ſtrata of ſtone become ſolid, but the matter whereof they conſiſt continued lax and incoherent, they had conſequently been as pervious as thoſe of marle or gravel. Woodward.

2. Inconſequential; inconſiſtent; having no dependance of one part upon another.

We have inſtances of perception whilſt we are aſleep, and retain the memory of them; but how extravagant and incoherent are they, and how little conformable to the perfection of a rational being! Locke.

INCOHE'RENTLY. adv. [from incoherent.] Inconſiſtently; inconſequentially.

The character of Eurylochus is the imitation of a perſon confounded with fears, ſpeaking irrationally and incoherently. Broome.

INDE'LICACY. n. s. [in and delicacy.] Want of delicacy; want of elegant decency.
Your papers would be chargeable with worse than indelicacy, they would be immoral, did you treat detestable uncleanness as you rally an impertinent self-love. Addison.

INDE'LICATE. adj. [in and delicate.] Wanting decency; void of a quick sense of decency.

INDEMNIFICA'TION. n. s. [from indemnify.]
1. Security against loss or penalty.
2. Reimbursement of loss or penalty.

To INDE'MNIFY. v. a. [in and damnify.]
1. To secure against loss or penalty.
2. To maintain unhurt.
Insolent signifies rude and haughty, indemnify to keep safe. Watts.

INDE'MNITY. n. s. [indemnité, French.] Security from punishment; exemption from punishment.
I will use all means, in the ways of amnesty and indemnity, which may most fully remove all fears, and bury all jealousies in forgetfulness. King Charles.

To INDE'NT. v. a. [in and dens, a tooth, Latin.] To mark any thing with inequalities like a row of teeth; to cut in and out; to make to wave or undulate.
About his neck
A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,
Who with her head, nimble in threats, approach'd
The opening of his mouth; but suddenly,
Seeing Orlando, it unlink'd itself,
And with indented glides did slip away
Into a bush. Shakesp. As you like it.
The serpent then, not with indented wave,
Prone on the ground, as since; but on his rear
Circular base of rising folds, that tower'd
Fold above fold, a surging maze! Milton.
Trent, who, like some earth-born giant, spreads
His thirty arms along the indented meads. Milton.
The margins on each side do not terminate in a straight line, but are indented. Woodward.

To INDE'NT. v. n. [from the method of cutting counterparts of a contract together, that, laid on each other, they may fit, and any want of conformity may discover a fraud.] To contract; to bargain; to make a compact.
Shall we buy treason, and indent with fears,
When they have lost and forfeited themselves? Shakespeare.
He descends to the solemnity of a pact and covenant, and has indented with us. Decay of Piety.

INDE'NT. n. s. [from the verb.] Inequality; incisure; indentation. This is little used.
Trent shall not wind with such a deep indent,
To rob me of so rich a bottom here. Shakesp.

INDENTA'TION. n. s. [in and dens, Latin.] An indenture; waving in any figure.
The margins do not terminate in a straight line, but are indented; each indentation being continued in a small ridge, to the indentation that answers it on the opposite margin. Woodward.

INDE'NTURE. n. s. [from indent.] A covenant, so named because the counterparts are indented or cut one by the other; a contract, of which there is a counterpart.
In Hall's chronicle much good matter is quite marred with indenture English. Ascham's Schoolm.
The critick to his grief will find
How firmly these indentures bind. Swift.

INDEPE'NDENCE. } n. s. [independance, Fr.
INDEPE'NDENCY. } in and dependence.] Freedom; exemption from reliance or controul; state over which none has power.
Dreams may give us some idea of the great excellency of a human soul, and some intimations of its independency on matter. Addison.
Let fortune do her worst, whatever she makes us lose, as long as she never makes us lose our honesty and our independence. Pope.
Give me, I cry'd, enough for me,
My bread and independency!
So bought an annual rent or two,
And liv'd just as you see I do. Pope.

INDEPENDENT. adj. [independant, Fr. in and dependent.]
1. Not depending; not supported by any other; not relying on another; not controlled. It is used with on, of, or from, before the object; of which on seems most proper, since we say to depend on, and consequently dependent on.
Creation must needs infer providence, and God's making the world irrefragably proves that he governs it too; or that a being of dependent nature remains nevertheless independent upon him in that respect. South.
Since all princes of independent governments are in a state of nature, the world never was without men in that state. Locke.
The town of St. Gall is a Protestant republick, independent of the abbot, and under the protection of the cantons. Addison.
2. Not relating to any thing else, as to a superior cause or power.
The consideration of our understanding, which is an incorporeal substance independent from matter; and the contemplation of our own bodies, which have all the stamps and characters of excellent contrivance; these alone do very easily guide us to the wise Author of all things. Bentley.

INDEPENDENT. n. s. One who in religious affairs holds that every congregation is a complete church, subject to no superior authority.
We shall, in our sermons take occasion to justify such passages in our liturgy as have been unjustly quarrelled at by presbyterians, independents, or other puritan sectaries. Sanderson.
A very famous independent minister was head of a college in those times. Addison's Spectator.

INDEPE'NDENTLY. adv. [from independent.] Without reference to other things.
Dispose lights and shadows, without finishing every thing independently the one of the other. Dryden.

INDESE'RT. n. s. [in and desert.] Want of merit. This is an useful word, but not much received.
Those who were once looked on as his equals, are apt to think the fame of his merit a reflection on their own indeserts. Addison.

I'NDICANT. adj. [indicans, Latin.] Showing; pointing out; that which directs what is to be done in any disease.

To INDICATE. v. a. [indico, Latin.]

1. To ſhow; to point out.
2. [In phyſick.] To point out a remedy. See INDICATION.

INDICA'TION. n. ſ. [indication, French; indicatio, from indico, Latin.]

1. Mark; token; ſign; note; ſymptom.

The frequent ſtops they make in the moſt convenient places, are a plain indication of their wearineſs. Addiſon.

We think that our ſucceſſes are a plain indication of the divine favour towards us. Atterbury.

2. [In phyſic.] Indication is of four kinds: vital, preſervative, curative, and palliative, as it directs what is to be done to continue life, cutting off the cauſe of an approaching diſtemper, curing it whilſt it is actually preſent, or leſſening its effects, or taking off ſome of its ſymptoms before it can be wholly removed.

The depravation of the inſtruments of maſtication is a natural indication of a liquid diet. Arbuthnot.

3. Diſcovery made; intelligence given.

If a perſon that had a fair eſtate in reverſion, ſhould be aſſured by ſome ſkilful phyſician, that he would inevitably fall into a diſeaſe that would totally deprive him of his underſtanding and memory; if, I ſay, upon a certain belief of this indication, the man ſhould appear overjoyed at the news, would not all that ſaw him conclude that the diſtemper had ſeized him? Bentley.

4. Explanation; diſplay.

Theſe be the things that govern nature principally, and without which you cannot make any true analyſis, and indication of the proceedings of nature. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

INDI'CATIVE. adj. [indicativus, Lat.]

1. Showing; informing; pointing out.
2. [In grammar.] A certain modification of a verb, expreſſing affirmation or indication.

INDI'CTION. n. ſ. [indiction, Fr. indico, Lat.]

1. Declaration; proclamation.

After a legation ad res repetendas, and a refuſal, and a denunciation and indiction of a war, the war is left at large. Bacon.

2. [In chronology.] The indiction, inſtituted by Conſtantine the Great, is properly a cycle of tributes, orderly diſpoſed, for fifteen years, and by it accounts of that kind were kept. Afterwards, in memory of the great victory obtained by Conſtantine over Mezentius, 8 Cal. Oct. 312, by which an entire freedom was given to Chriſtianity, the council of Nice, for the honour of Conſtantine, ordained that the accounts of years ſhould be no longer kept by the Olympiads, which till that time had been done; but that, inſtead thereof, the indiction ſhould be made uſe of, by which to reckon and date their years, which hath its epocha A. D. 313, Jan. 1.

INDI'FFERENCE. } n. ſ. [indifference, Fr. INDI'FFERENCY. } indifferentia, Latin.]

1. Neutrality; ſuſpenſion; equipoiſe or freedom from motives on either ſide.

In choice of committees it is better to chuſe indifferent perſons, than to make an indifferency by putting in thoſe that are ſtrong on both ſides. Bacon's Eſſays.

By an equal indifferency for all truth, I mean, not loving it as ſuch, before we know it to be true. Locke.

A perfect indifferency in the mind, not determinable by its laſt judgment, would be as great an imperfection as the want of indifferency to act, or not to act, till determined by the will. Locke.

Thoſe who would borrow light from expoſitors, conſult either only thoſe who have the good luck to be thought ſound and orthodox, avoiding thoſe of different ſentiments; or elſe with indifferency look into notes of all commentators. Locke.

2. Impartiality.

Read the book with indifferency and judgment, and thou canſt not but greatly commend it. Whitgifte.

3. Negligence; want of affection; unconcernedneſs.

Indifference cannot but be criminal; when it is converſant about objects which are ſo far from being of an indifferent nature, that they are of the higheſt importance. Addiſon.

A place which we muſt paſs through, not only with the indifference of ſtrangers, but with the vigilance of thoſe who travel through the country of an enemy. Rogers.

Indiff'rence, clad in wiſdom's guiſe,
All fortitude of mind ſupplies;
For how can ſtony bowels melt,
In thoſe who never pity felt? Swift.

He will let you know he has got a clap with as much indifferency as he would a piece of public news. Swift.

The people of England ſhould be frighted with the French king and the Pretender once a-year: the want of obſerving this neceſſary precept, has produced great indifference in the vulgar. Arbuthnot.

4. State in which no moral or phyſical reaſon preponderates; ſtate in which there is no difference.

The choice is left to our diſcretion, except a principal bond of ſome higher duty remove the indifference that ſuch things have in themſelves: their indifference is removed, if we take away our own liberty. Hooker.

INDI'FFERENT. adj. [indifferent, Fr. indifferens, Lat.]

1. Neutral; not determined on either ſide.

Doth his majeſty
Incline to it or no?
——He ſeems indifferent. Shakeſp.

Being indifferent, we ſhould receive and embrace opinions according as evidence gives the atteſtation of truth. Locke.

True love, well considered, hath an infective power. Sidney.

INFECU'ND. n. s. [infœcundus, Latin.] Unfruitful; infertile.

How safe and agreeable a conservatory the earth is to vegetables, is manifest from their rotting, drying, or being rendered infecund in the waters, or the air; but in the earth their vigour is long preserved. Derham's Physico-Theology

INFECUNDITY. n. s. [infœcunditas, Latin.] Want of fertility; barrenness.

INFELI'CITY. n. s. [infelicité, French; infelicitas, Latin.] Unhappiness; misery: calamity.

Whatever is the ignorance and infelicity of the present state, we were made wise and happy. Glanvill.

Here is our great infelicity, that, when single words signify complex ideas, one word can never distinctly manifest all the parts of a complex idea. Watts.

To INFE'R. v. a. [inferer, Fr. infero, Lat.]

1. To bring on; to induce.

Vomits infer some small detriment to the lungs. Harvey.

2. To infer is nothing but, by virtue of one proposition laid down as true, to draw in another as true, i. e. to see or suppose such a connection of the two ideas or the inferred proposition. Locke.

What thou can'st attain, which best may serve
To glorify the Maker, and infer
Thee also happier, shall not be with-held
Thy hearing. Milton.

Great,
Or bright, infers not excellence: the earth
Though in comparison of heav'n so small,
Nor glittering, may of solid good contain
More plenty than the sun, that barren shines. Milton.

One would wonder how, from so differing premisses, they should all infer the same conclusion. Decay of Piety.

They have more opportunities, than other men have of purchasing public esteem, by deserving well of mankind; and such opportunities always infer obligations. Atterbury.

3. To offer; to produce. Not in use.

Full well hath Clifford played the orator,
Inferring arguments of mighty force. Shakesp.

INFERENCE. n. s. [inference, Fr. from infer.] Conclusion drawn from previous arguments.

Though it may chance to be right in the conclusion, it is yet unjust and mistaken in the method of inference. Glanville.

These inferences or conclusions are the effects of reasoning, and the three propositions taken all together, are called syllogism or argument. Watts.

INFE'RIBLE adj. [from infer.] Deducible from premised grounds.

As simple mistakes commonly beget fallacies, so men from fallacious foundations, and misapprehended mediums, erect conclusions no way inferible from their premisses. Brown.

INFERIO'RITY. n. s. [infériorité, French, from inferiour.] Lower state of dignity or value.

Our language, though not of equal dignity, yet is [illegible] approaching to it as our modern barbarism is to Virgil; and therefore we are to rest contented with that only inferiority which is not possibly to be cumulated. Dryden.

INFE'RIOUR. adj. [inferior, Latin; inferieur, French.]

1. Lower in place.

2. Lower in station or rank of life: correlative to superiour.

Render me more equal, or perhaps
Superiour, for inferiour who is free? Milton.

3. Lower in value or excellency.

The love of liberty with life is giv'n,
And life itself th' inferiour gift of heav'n. Dryden.

I have added some original papers of my own, which, whether they are equal or inferiour to my other poems, an author is the most improper judge of. Dryden.

4. Subordinate.

General and fundamental truths in philosophy, religion, and human life, conduct our thoughts into a thousand inferiour and particular propositions. Watts.

INFIDE'LITY. n. s. [infidelité, Fr. infidelitas, Latin.]

1. Want of faith.

The consideration of the divine omnipotence and infinite wisdom, and our own ignorance, are great instruments of silencing the murmurs of infidelity. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

2. Disbelief of Christianity.

One would fancy that infidels would be exempt from that single fault, which seems to grow out of the imprudent servants of religion; but so it is, that infidelity is propagated with as much fierceness and contention, as if the safety of mankind depended upon it. Spectator.

3. Treachery; deceit; breach of contract or trust.

The infidelities on the one part between the two sexes, and the caprices on the other, the vanities and vexations attending even the most refined delights that make up this business of life, render it silly and uncomfortable. Spectator.

INFINITE. adj. [infini, Fr. infinitus, Lat.]

1. Unbounded; boundless; unlimited; immense; having no boundaries or limits to its nature.

Impossible it is, that God should withdraw his presence from any thing, because the very subsistence of God is infinite. Hooker.

What's time, when on eternity we think
A thousand ages in that sea must sink.
Time's nothing but a word? a million
Is full as far from infinite as one. Denham.

Thou sov'reign pow'r, whose secret will controuls
The inward bent and motion of our souls!
Why hast thou plac'd such infinite degrees
Between the cause and cure of my disease. Prior.

When we would think of infinite space or duration, we at first make some very large idea; as perhaps of millions of ages or miles, which possibly we multiply several times Locke.

Even an angel's comprehensive thought
Cannot extend as far as thou hast wrought:
Our vast conceptions are by swelling brought,
Swallow'd and lost in infinite, to nought. Dennis.

2. It is hyperbolically used for large; great.

INFINITELY. adv. [from infinite.]

Infinitely the greater part of mankind have professed to act under a full persuasion of this great article. Rogers.

INFINITENESS. n. s. [from infinite.] Immensity; boundlessness; infinity.

The cunning of his flattery, the readiness of his tears, the infiniteness of his vows, were but among the weakest threads of his net. Sidney.

Let us always bear about us such impressions of reverence, and fear of God, that we may humble ourselves before his Almightiness, and express that infinite distance between his infiniteness and our weakness. Taylor.

INFINITESIMAL. adj [from infinite.] Infinitely divided.

INFI'NITIVE, adj. [infinitif, Fr. infinitivus, Latin.] In grammar, the infinitive affirms or intimates the intention of affirming, which is one use of the indicative; but then it does not do it absolutely. Clarke.

INFI'NITUDE. n. s. [from infinite.]

1. Infinity; immensity.

Confusion heard his voice, and wild uproar
Stood rul'd, stood vast infinitude confin'd. Milton.

Though the repugnacy of infinitude be equally incompetible to continued or successive motion, or continued quantity, and pends upon the incompossibility of the very nature of things successive or extensive with infinitude; yet that incompossibility is more conspicuous in diserete quantity, that ariseth from parts actually distinguished. Hale.

2. Boundless number.

We see all the good sense of the age cut out, and minced into almost an infinitude of distinctions. Addison's Spectator.

INFI'NITY. n. s. [infinité, Fr. infinitas, Lat.]

1. Immensity; boundlessness; unlimited qualities.

There cannot be more infinities than one; for one of them would limit the other. Raleigh's History.

The better, the more desirable; that therefore must be desirable, wherein there is infinity of goodness; so that if any thing desirable may be infinite, that must needs be the highest of all things that are desired: no good is infinite but only God, therefore he is our felicity and bliss. Hooker.

2. Endless number. An hyperbolical use of the word.

Homer has concealed faults under an infinity of admirable beauties. Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

The liver, being swelled, compresseth the stomach, stops the circulation of the juices, and produceth an infinity of bad symptoms. Arbuthnot on Diet.

In this cloſe dungeon of innumerous boughs Milton.
I take the wood,
And in thick ſhelter of innum'rous boughs,
Enjoy the comfort gentle ſleep allows. Pope's Odyſſ

To INOCULATE. v. n. [inoculo, in and oculus, Lat.] To propagate any plant by inſerting its bud into another ſtock; to practiſe inoculation. See INOCULATION.
Nor are the ways alike in all
How to ingraft, how to inoculate Mar. Virgil.
Now is the ſeaſon for the budding of the orange-tree: inoculate therefore at the commencement of this month Evelyn.
But various are the ways to change the ſtate,
To plant, to bud, to graft, to inoculate. Dryden.

To INOCULATE. v. a. To yield a bud to another ſtock.
Virtue cannot ſo inoculate our old ſtock, but we ſhall reliſh of it. Shakeſpeare's Hamlet.
Thy ſtock is too much out of date,
For tender plants t' inoculate. Cleaveland.
Where lilies, in a lovely brown,

INOCULATION. n. ſ. [inoculatio, Lat. from inoculate.]

1. Inoculation is practiſed upon all ſorts of ſtone fruit, and upon oranges and jaſmines. Chuſe a ſmooth part of the ſtock; then with your knife make an horizontal cut acroſs the rind of the ſtock, and from the middle of that cut make a ſlit downwards about two inches in length in the form of a T; but be careful not to cut too deep, leſt you wound the ſtock; then having cut off the leaf from the bud, leaving the footſtalk remaining, make a croſs cut about half an inch below the eye, and with your knife ſlit off the bud, with part of the wood to it. This done, with your knife pull off that part of the wood which was taken with the bud, obſerving whether the eye of the bud be left to it or not; for all thoſe buds which loſe their eyes in ſtripping are good for nothing: then raiſing the bark of the ſtock, thruſt the bud therein, placing it ſmooth between the rind and the wood of the ſtock; and ſo having exactly fitted the bud to the ſtock, tie them cloſely round, taking care not to bind round the eye of the bud. Miller.
In the ſtem of Elatana they all met, and came to be ingrafted all upon one ſtock, moſt of them by inoculation. Howel.

2. The practice of tranſplanting the ſmall-pox, by infuſion of the matter from ripened puſtules into the veins of the uninfected, in hopes of procuring a milder ſort than what frequently comes by infection. Quincy.
It is evident, by inoculation, that the ſmalleſt quantity of the matter, mixed with the blood, produceth the diſeaſe. Arbuthnot.

INOCULATOR. n. ſ. [from inoculate.]

1. One that practiſes the inoculation of trees.

2. One who propagates the ſmall-pox by inoculation.
Had John a Gaddeſden been now living, he would have been at the head of the inoculators.
Freind's Hiſt. of Phyſick.

INTRA'NSITIVE. adj. [intransitivus, Latin.] [In grammar.] A verb intransitive is that which signifies an action, not conceived as having an effect upon any object; as, curro, I run. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

INTRANSMU'TABLE. adj. [in and transmutable.] Unchangeable to any other substance.

Some of the most experienced chemists do affirm quicksilver to be intransmutable, and therefore call it liquor æternus. Ray on the Creation.

To INTRE'ASURE. v. a. [in and treasure.] To lay up as in a treasury.

There is a history in all men's lives,
Figuring the nature of the times deceas'd;
The which observ'd, a man may prophesy,
With a near aim, of the main chance of things
As yet not come to life, which in their seeds
And weak beginnings be intreasured. Shakesp.

To INTRENCH. v. n. [in and trencher, Fr.] To invade; to encroach; to cut off part of what belongs to another; with on.

Little I desire my sceptre should intrench on God's sovereignty, which is the only king of men's consciences. K. Charles.

That crawling insect, who from mud began,
Warm'd by my beams, and kindled into man!
Durst he, who does but for my pleasure live,
Intrench on love, my great prerogative. Dryden.

We are not to intrench upon truth in any conversation, but least of all with children Locke.

To INTRENCH. v. a.

1. To break with hollows.

His face
Deep scars of thunder had intrench'd, and care
Sat on his faded cheek. Milton's Par. Lost.

2. To fortify with a trench: as, the allies were intrenched in their camp.

INTRENCHANT. adj. [This word, which is, I believe, found only in Shakespeare, is thus explained: The intrenchant air means the air which suddenly encroaches and closes upon the space left by any body which had passed through it, Hanmer. I believe Shakespeare intended rather to express the idea of indivisibility or invulnerableness, and derived intrenchant, from in privative, and trencher, to cut; intrenchant is indeed properly not cutting, rather than not to be cut; but this is not the only instance in which Shakespeare confounds words of active and passive signification.] Not to be divided; not to be wounded; indivisible.

As easy may'st thou the intrenchant air
With thy keen sword impress, as make me bleed. Shakespeare.

INTRE'NCHMENT. n. s. [from intrench.] Fortification with a trench.

INTRE'PID. adj. [intrepide, Fr. intrepidus, Lat.] Fearless; daring; bold; brave.

Of sulphurous war, on Tenier's dreadful field. Thomson.

INTREPI'DITY. n. s. [intrepidité, Fr.] Fearlessness; courage; boldness.

I could not sufficiently wonder at the intrepidity of these diminutive mortals, who durst venture to walk upon my body, without trembling. Gulliver.

INTRE-

INTREPI'DLY. adv. [from intrepid.] Fearlesly; boldly; daringly.

He takes the globe for the scene; he launches forward intrepidly, like one to whom no place is new. Pope.

I'NTRICACY. n. f. [from intricate.] State of being entangled; perplexity; involution; complication of facts or notions.

The part of Ulysses in Homer's Odyssey is much admired by Aristotle, as perplexing that fable with very agreeable plots and intricacies, by the many adventures in his voyage, and the subtilty of his behaviour Addison.

I'NTRICATE. adj. [intricatus, Latin.] Entangled; perplexed; involved; complicated; obscure.

Much of that we are to speak may seem to a number perhaps tedious, perhaps obscure, dark, and intricate. Hooker.

His stile was fit to convey the most intricate business to the understanding with the utmost clearness. Addison.

To I'NTRICATE. [from the adjective.] To perplex; to darken. Not proper, nor in use.

Alterations of surnames, have so intricated, or rather obscured, the truths of our pedigrees, that it will be no little hard labour to deduce them. Camden.

I'NTRICATELY. adv. [from intricate.] With involution of one in another; with perplexity

That variety of factions into which we are so intricately engaged, gave occasion to this discourse. Swift.

I'NTRICATENESS. n. f. [from intricate.] Perplexity; involution; obscurity.

He found such intricateness, that he could see no way to lead him out of the maze. Sidney.

INTRI'GUE. n. f. [intrigue, Fr.]

1. A plot; a private transaction in which many parties are engaged; usually an affair of love.

These are the grand intrigues of man,
These his huge thoughts, and these his vast desires. Flatman.

A young fellow long made love, with much artifice and intrigue, to a rich widow. Addison's Guardian

The hero of a comedy is represented victorious in all his intrigues. Swift.

Now love is dwindled to intrigue,
And marriage grown a money league. Swift.

2. Intricacy, complication. Little in use.

Though this vicinity of ourselves to ourselves cannot give us the full prospect of all the intrigues of our nature, yet we have much more advantage to know ourselves, than to know other things without us. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

3. The complication or perplexity of a fable or poem; artful involution of feigned transaction.

As causes are the beginning of the action, the opposite designs against that of the hero are the middle of it, and form that difficulty or intrigue which makes up the greatest part of the poem. Pope.

To INTRI'GUE. v. n. [intriguer, Fr. from the noun.] To form plots; to carry on private designs, commonly of love.

INTRI'GUER. n. f. [intrigueur, Fr. from intrigue.] One who busies himself in private transactions; one who forms plots; one who pursues women.

INTRI'GUINGLY. adv. [from intrigue.] With intrigue; with secret plotting.

INTRI'NSECAL. adj. [intrinsecus, Lat. intrinsèque, Fr. This word is now generally written intrinsical, contrary to etymology.]

1. Internal; solid; natural; not accidental; not merely apparent.

These measure the laws of God not by the intrinsecal goodness and equity of them, but by reluctancy and opposition which they find in their own hearts against them. Tillotson.

The near and intrinsecal, and convincing argument of the being of God, is from human nature itself. Bentley.

2. Intimate; closely familiar. Out of use.

He falls into intrinsecal society with Sir John Graham, who dissuaded him from marriage. Wotton.

Sir Fulk Greville was a man in appearance intrinsecal with him, or at least admitted to his melancholy hours. Wotton.

INTRI'NSECALLY. adv. [from intrinsecal.]

1. Internally; naturally; really.

A lye is a thing absolutely and intrinsecally evil. South.

Every one of his pieces is an ingot of gold, intrinsecally and solidly valuable. Prior.

2. Within; at the inside.

In his countenance no open alteration; but the less he shewed without, the more it wrought intrinsecally. Wotton.

If once bereaved of motion, matter cannot of itself acquire it again; nor till it be thrust by some other body from without, or intrinsecally moved by an immaterial self-active substance that can pervade it. Bentley.

INTRI'NSICK. adj. [intrinsecus, Lat.]

1. Inward; internal; real; true.

Intrinsick goodness consists in accordance, and sin in contrariety to the secret will of God, as well as to his revealed. Hammond's Fundamentals.

2. Not depending on accident; fixed in the nature of the thing.

The difference between worth and merit, strictly taken; that, is a man's intrinsick, this, his current value. Grew.

His fame, like gold, the more 'tis tried
The more shall its intrinsick worth proclaim. Prior.

Beautiful as a jewel set in gold, which, though it adds little to intrinsick value, yet improves the lustre, and attracts the eyes of the beholder. Rogers.

INTRI'NSECATE. adj. [This word seems to have been ignorantly formed between intricate and intrinsecal.] Perplexed; entangled. Not in use.

Such smiling rogues as these,
Like rats, oft bite the holy cords in twain,
Too intrinsecate t'unloose. Shakesp. King Lear.

Come, mortal wretch,
With thy sharp teeth this knot intrinsicate
Of life at once untye. Shak. Antony and Cleopatra.

To INTRODU'CE. v. a. [introduco, Lat. introduire, French.]

1. To conduct or usher into a place, or to a person.

Mathematicians of advanced speculations may have other ways to introduce into their minds ideas of infinity. Locke.

2. To bring something into notice or practice.

This vulgar error whosoever is able to reclaim, he shall introduce a new way of cure, preserving by theory as well as practice. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

An author who should introduce a sport of words upon the stage, would meet with small applause. Broome.

3. To produce; to give occasion to.

Whatsoever introduces habits in children, deserves the care and attention of their governors. Locke.

4. To bring into writing or discourse by proper preparatives.

JOT. n. ſ. [ιωτα.] A point; a tittle; the leaſt quantity aſſignable.

As ſuperfluous fleſh did rot,
Amendment ready ſtill at hand did wait,
To pluck it out with pincers fiery hot,
That ſoon in him was left no one corrupt jot.
Fa. Queen.

Go, Eros, ſend his treaſure after, do it:
Detain no jot, I charge thee. Shakeſp.

Let me not ſtay a jot from dinner; go, get it ready.
Shakeſp.

This nor hurts him nor profits you a jot;
Forbear it therefore; give your cauſe to Heav'n.
Shakeſp.

This bond doth give thee here no jot of blood;
The words expreſsly are a pound of fleſh. Shakeſp.

I argue not
Againſt Heav'n's hand, or will; nor bate one jot
Of heat or hope; but ſtill bear up and ſteer
Right onwards. Milton.

You might, with every jot as much juſtice, hang me up becauſe I'm old, as beat me becauſe I'm impotent. L'Eſtrange.

A man may read the diſcourſes of a very rational author, and yet acquire not one jot of knowledge.
Locke.

The final event will not be one jot leſs the conſequence of our own choice and actions, for God's having from all eternity foreſeen and determined what that event ſhall be. Rogers.

JOVIAL. adj. [jovial, Fr. jovialis, Lat.]

1. Under the influence of Jupiter.

The fixed ſtars are aſtrologically differenced by the planets, and are eſteemed martial or jovial, according to the colours whereby they anſwer theſe planets. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

2. Gay; airy; merry.

My lord, ſleek o'er your rugged looks,
Be bright and jovial 'mong your gueſts. Shakeſp.

Our jovial ſtar reign'd at his birth. Shakeſp.

Some men, of an ill and melancholy nature, incline the company into which they come, to be ſad and ill-diſpoſed; and contrariwiſe, others of a jovial nature diſpoſe the company to be merry and cheerful. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

His odes are ſome of them panegyrical, others moral, the reſt jovial or bacchanalian. Dryden.

Perhaps the jeſt that charm'd the ſprightly crowd,
And made the jovial table laugh ſo loud,
To ſome falſe notion ow'd its poor pretence. Prior.

JOVIALLY. adv. [from jovial.] Merrily; gaily.

JOVIALNESS. n. ſ. [from jovial.] Gaiety; merriment.

JOUISANCE. n. ſ. [rejouiſſance, Fr.] Jollity; merriment; feſtivity. Obſolete.

Colin,

Colin, my dear, when ſhall it pleaſe thee ſing,
As thou wert wont, ſongs of ſome jouiſance?
Thy muſe too long ſlumbereth in ſorrowing,
Lulled aſleep through love's miſgovernance. Spenſer.

JO'URNAL. adj. [journale, Fr. giornale, Italian.] Daily; quotidian. Out of uſe.

Now 'gan the golden Phœbus for to ſteep
His fiery face in billows of the Weſt,
And his faint ſteeds water'd in ocean deep,
Whilſt from their journal labours they did reſt.
Fa. Queen.

Ere twice the ſun has made his journal greeting
To th' under generation, you ſhall find
Your ſafety manifeſted. Shakeſp. Mea. for Meaſure.

Stick to your journal courſe; the breach of cuſtom
Is breach of all. Shakeſpeare's Cymbeline.

JO'URNAL. n. ſ. [journal, Fr. giornale, Italian.]

He for the promis'd journey bids prepare
The ſmooth-hair'd horſes and the rapid car. Pope.

3. Paſſage from place to place.

Some, having a long journey from the upper regions, would float up and down a good while. Burnet.

Light of the world, the ruler of the year,
Still as thou do'ſt thy radiant journeys run
Through every diſtant climate own,
That in fair Albion thou haſt ſeen
The greateſt prince, the brighteſt queen. Prior.

To JO'URNEY. v. n. [from the noun.] To travel; to paſs from place to place.

Gentlemen of good eſteem
Are journeying to ſalute the emperor. Shakeſpeare.

We are journeying unto the place, of which the Lord ſaid, I will give it you. Numbers.

Since ſuch love's natural ſtation is, may ſtill
My love deſcend, and journey down the hill;
Not panting after growing beauties, ſo
I ſhall ebb on with them who homeward go. Donne.

I have journeyed this morning, and it is now the heat of the day, therefore your lordſhip's diſcourſes had need content my ears very well, to make them entreat my eyes to keep open. Bacon.

Over the tent a cloud
Shall reſt by day, a fiery gleam by night,
Save when they journey. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

Having heated his body by journeying, he took cold upon the ground. Wiſeman's Surgery.

JO'URNEYMAN n. ſ. [journee, a day's work, Fr. and man.] A hired workman; a workman hired by the day.

They were called journeymen that wrought with others by the day, though now by ſtatute to be extended to thoſe likewiſe that covenant to work in their occupation with another by the year. Cowel.

Players have ſo ſtrutted and bellowed, that I have thought ſome of Nature's journeymen had made men, and not made them well. Shakeſpeare's Hamlet.

I intend to work for the court myſelf, and will have journeymen under me to furniſh the reſt of the nation. Addiſon.

Says Frog to Bull, this old rogue will take the buſineſs into his hands: we muſt ſtarve or turn journeymen to old Lewis Baboon. Arbuthnot's John Bull.

JO'URNEYWORK. n. ſ. [journée, French, and work.] Work performed for hire; work done by the day.

Did no committee ſit where he
Might cut out journeywork for thee?
And ſet thee a taſk with ſubornation,
To ſtitch up ſale and ſequeſtration? Hudibras.

Her family ſhe was forced to hire out at journeywork to her neighbours. Arbuthnot's John Bull.

JOUST. n. ſ. [jouſt, Fr.] Tilt; tournament; mock fight. It is now written leſs properly juſt.

Jouſted in Aſpramont or Montalban. Milton.

JO'WLER. n. ſ. [perhaps corrupted from howler, as making a hideous noiſe after the game, whom the reſt of the pack follow as their leader.] The name of a hunting dog or beagle.

See him draw his feeble legs about,
Like hounds ill-coupled: jowler lugs him ſtill
Through hedges, ditches, and through all this ill.
Dryden.

JO'WTER. n. ſ. [perhaps corrupted from jolter.]

Plenty of fiſh is vented to the fiſh-drivers, whom we call jowters. Carew.

JOY. n. ſ. [joye, Fr. gioia, Italian.]

1. The paſſion produced by any happy accident; gladneſs; exultation.

Joy is a delight of the mind, from the conſideration of the preſent, or aſſured approaching poſſeſſion of a good. Locke.

There appears much joy in him; even ſo much, that joy could not ſhew itſelf modeſt enough without a badge of bitterneſs. Shakeſp.

There ſhould not be ſuch heavineſs in their deſtruction, as ſhall be joy over them that are perſuaded to ſalvation 2 Eſdr.

The lightſome paſſion of joy was not that trivial, vaniſhing, ſuperficial thing, that only gilds the apprehenſion, and plays upon the ſurface of the ſoul.
South.

2. Gaiety; merriment; feſtivity.

The roofs with joy reſound;
And Hymen, Io Hymen, rung around. Dryden.

3. Happineſs; felicity.

My lord Baſſanio, and my gentle lady,
I wiſh you all the joy that you can wiſh. Shakeſp.

Come, love and health to all;
Then I'll ſit down: give me ſome wine:
I drink to the general joy of the whole table. Shak.

Almeyda ſmiling came,
Attended with a train of all her race,
Whom in the rage of empire I had murder'd;
But now, no longer foes, they gave me joy
Of my new conqueſt. Dryden's Don Sebaſtian.

The bride,
Lovely herſelf, and lovely by her ſide,
A bevy of bright nymphs, with ſober grace,
Came glitt'ring like a ſtar, and took her place:
Her heav'nly form beheld, all with'd her joy;
And little wanted, but in vain, their wiſhes all employ. Dryden.

4. A term of fondneſs.

Now our joy,
Although our laſt, yet not our leaſt young love,
What ſay you? Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

To JOY. v. n. [from the noun.] To rejoice; to be glad; to exult.

Sometimes I joy, when glad occaſion fits,
And mark in mirth like to a comedy;
Soon after, when my joy to ſorrow flits,
I will make my woes a tragedy. Spenſer.

I cannot joy, until I be reſolv'd
Where our right valiant father is become.
Shakeſp. H. VI.

He will joy over thee with ſinging. Zeph. iii. 17.

I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my ſalvation. Hab. iii. 18.

Exceeding the more joyed we for the joy of Titus, becauſe his ſpirit was refreſhed by you.
2 Cor. vii. 13.

They laugh, we weep; they joy while we lament.
Fairf.

No man imparteth his joys to his friend, but he joyeth the more; and no man imparteth his griefs, but he grieveth the leſs. Bacon's Eſſays.

Well then, my ſoul, joy in the midſt of pain;
Thy Chriſt that conquer'd hell, ſhall from above
With greater triumph yet return again,
And conquer his own juſtice with his love. Wotton.

Joy thou,
In what he gives to thee, this paradiſe,
And thy fair Eve. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

Their chearful age with honour youth attends,
Joy'd that from pleaſure's ſlav'ry they are free.
Dunham.

To JOY. v. a.

1. To congratulate; to entertain kindly.

Like us they love or hate, like us they know
To joy the friend, or grapple with the foe. Prior.

2. To gladden; to exhilerate.

She went to Pamela, meaning to delight her eyes and joy her thoughts with the converſation of her beloved ſiſter. Sidney.

My ſoul was joy'd in vain;
For angry Neptune ſour'd the raging main Pope.

3. [Jouir de, French.] To enjoy; to have happy poſſeſſion of.

Let us hence,
And let her joy her raven-colour'd love.
Shak. Tit. Andr.

I might have liv'd, and joy'd immortal bliſs,
Yet willingly choſe rather death with thee. Milton.

Th' Uſurper joy'd not long
His ill-got crown. Dryden's Spaniſh Friar.

JOY'ANCE. n. ſ. [joiant, old French.] Gaiety; feſtivity. Obſolete.

Bring home with you the glory of her gain;
With joyance bring her, and with jollity. Spenſer.

There him reſts in riotous ſuffiſance,
Of all his gladfulneſs and kingly joyance. Spenſer.

JO'YFUL. adj. [joy and full.]

1. Full of joy; glad; exulting.

They bleſſed the king, and went unto their tents joyful and glad of heart. 1 Kings.

My ſoul ſhall be joyful in my God. Iſa. lxi. 10.

2. Sometimes it has of before the cauſe of joy.

Six brave companions from each ſhip we loſt:
With ſails outſpread we fly th' unequal ſtrife,
Sad for their loſs, but joyful of our life. Pope's Odyſſ.

JO'YFULLY. adv. [from joyful.] With joy; gladly.

If we no more meet till we meet in heav'n,
Then joyfully, my noble lord of Bedford,
And my kind kinſmen, warriours all, adieu. Shak.

Never did men more joyfully obey,
Or ſooner underſtood the ſign to flie:
With ſuch alacrity they bore away,
As if to praiſe them all the ſtates ſtood by. Dryden.

The good Chriſtian conſiders pains only as neceſſary paſſages to a glorious immortality; that, through this dark ſcene of ſanctified horror, ſees a crown and a throne, and everlaſting bleſſings prepared for him, joyfully receives his ſummons, as he has long impatiently expected it. Wake.

JO'YFULNESS. n. ſ. [from joyful.] Gladneſs; joy.

Thou ſerveſt not the Lord thy God with joyfulneſs, and with gladneſs of heart, for the abundance of all things. Deut.

JO'YLESS. adj. [from joy.]

1. Void of joy; feeling no pleaſure.

A little joy enjoys the queen thereof;
For I am ſhe, and altogether joyleſs. Shakeſp. R. III.

With down-caſt eyes the joyleſs victor ſat,
Revolving in his alter'd ſoul
The various turns of chance below:
And now and then a ſigh he ſtole,
And tears began to flow. Dryd. Alexander's Feaſt.

2. It has ſometimes of before the object.

With two fair eyes his mistress burns his breast;
He looks and languishes, and leaves his rest;
Forsakes his food, and pining for the lass,
Is joyless of the grove, and spurns the growing grass.
Dryden.

3. Giving no pleasure.

A joyless, dismal, black, and sorrowful issue:
Here is a babe, as loathsome as a toad. Shakesp.
Here Love his golden shafts employs; here lights
His constant lamp, and waves his purple wings;
Reigns here, and revels: not in the bought smiles
Of harlots, loveless, joyless, unendear'd,
Casual fruition. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The pure in heart shall see God; and if any others could so invade this their inclosure, as to take heaven by violence, it surely would be a very joyless possession.
Decay of Piety.
He forgets his sleep, and loaths his food,
That youth, and health, and war are joyless to him.
Addison.

JO'YOUS. adj. [joyeux, Fr.]

1. Glad, gay; merry.

Most joyous man, on whom the shining sun
Did shew his face, myself I did esteem,
And that my taller friend did no less joyous deem.
Fairy Queen.
Joyous the birds; fresh gales and gentle airs
Whisper'd it. Milton.
Then joyous birds frequent the lonely grove,
And beasts, by nature stung, renew their love. Dryd.
Fast by her flow'ry bank the sons of Arcas,
Fav'rites of heav'n, with happy care protect
Their fleecy charge, and joyous drink her wave. Prior.

2. Giving joy.

They 'll as glad as birds of joyous prime,
Thence-ied her forth, about her dancing round.
Fairy Queen.

3. It has of sometimes before the cause of joy.

Round our death-bed ev'ry friend should run,
And joyous of our conquest early won;
While the malicious world with envious tears
Should grudge our happy end, and with it theirs.
Dryden.

IPECACUA'NHA. n. s. [An Indian plant.]

Ipecacuanha, is a small irregularly contorted root, rough, dense, and firm. One sort is of a dusky greyish colour on the surface, and of a pale grey when broken, brought from Peru: the other sort is a smaller root, resembling the former; but it is of a deep dusky brown on the outside, and white when broken, brought from the Brasils. The grey ought to be preferred, because the brown is apt to operate more roughly. Hill's Mat. Med.

IRA'SCIBLE. adj. [irascibilis, low Lat. irascible, Fr.] Partaking of the nature of anger.

The irascible passions follow the temper of the heart, and the concupiscible distractions on the crasis of the liver. Brown.
I know more than one instance of irascible passions subdued by a vegetable diet. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
We are here in the country surrounded with blessings and pleasures, without any occasion of exercising our irascible faculties. Digby to Pope.

IRE. n. s. [Fr. ira, Lat.] Anger; rage; passionate hatred.

She lik'd not his desire;
Fain would be free, but dreaded parents ire. Sidney.
If I digg'd up thy forefather's graves,
And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
It could not slake mine ire, nor ease my heart. Shak.
Or Neptune's ire, or Juno's, that so long
Perplex'd the Greek and Cytherea's son. Milton.
The sentence, from thy head remov'd, may light
On me, sole cause to thee of all this woe;
Me! me! only just object of his ire. Milton.
For this th' avenging pow'r employs his darts,
And empties all his quiver in our hearts;
Thus will persist, relentless in his ire,
Till the fair slave be render'd to her sire. Dryden.

IRE'FUL. adj. [ire and full.] Angry; raging; furious.

The ireful bastard Orleans, that drew blood
From thee, my boy, I soon encountered. Shakesp.
By many hands your father was subdu'd;
But only slaughter'd by the ireful arm
Of unrelenting Clifford. Shakesp. Henry VI.
There learn'd this maid, of arms the ireful guise.
Fairfax.
In midst of all the dome Misfortune sat,
And gloomy Discontent, and fell Debate,
And Madness laughing in his ireful mood. Dryden.

I'REFULLY. adv. [from ire.] With ire; in an angry manner.

I'RIS. n. s. [Latin.]

1. The rainbow.

Beside the solary iris, which God sheweth unto Noah, there is another lunary, whose efficient is the moon. Brown.

2. Any appearance of light resembling the rainbow.

When both bows appeared more distinct, I measured the breadth of the interior iris 2 gr. 10′; and the breadth of the red, yellow, and green in the exterior iris, was to the breadth of the same colours in the interior 3 to 2. Newton's Opt.

3. The circle round the pupil of the eye.

4. The flower-de-luce.

Iris all hues, roses and jessamine. Milton.

To IRK. v. a. [yrk, work, Islandick.] This word is used only impersonally, it irks me; mihi pœne est, it gives me pain; or, I am weary of it. Thus the authors of the accidence say, tædet, it irketh.

Come, shall we go and kill us venison?
And yet it irks me, the poor dappled fools
Should, in their own confines, with forked heads,
Have their round haunches gor'd. Shakesp.
I irks his heart, he cannot be reveng'd. Shakesp.

I'RKSOME. adj [from irk.] Wearisome; tedious; troublesome; toilsome; tiresome; unpleasing.

I know she is an irksome brawling scold. Shakesp.
Since that thou can't talk of love so well,
Thy company, which erst was irksome to me,
I will endure. Shakesp. As you like it.
Where he may likeliest find
Truce to his restless thoughts, and entertain
The irksome hours till his great chief return. Milton.
For not to irksome toil, but to delight
He made us, and delight to reason join'd. Milton.
There is nothing so irksome as general discourses, especially when they turn chiefly upon words.
Addison's Spectator.
Frequent appeals from hence have been very irksome to that illustrious body. Swift.

I'RKSOMELY. adv. [from irksome.] Wearisomely; tediously.

I'RKSOMENESS. n. s. [from irksome.] Tediousness; wearisomeness.

I'RON. n. s. [haiarn, Welsh; ɪɾeɾn, ɪɾen, Saxon; iorn, Erse.]

1. A metal common to all parts of the world. Though the lightest of all metals except tin, it is considerably the hardest; and when pure, naturally malleable: when wrought into steel, or when in the impure state from its first fusion, it is scarce malleable. Most of the other metals are brittle, while they are hot; but this is most malleable as it approaches nearest to fusion. The specifick gravity of iron is to water as 7632 is to 1000. It is the only known substance that is attracted by the loadstone. Iron has greater medicinal virtues than any of the other metals.
Hill.
Nor airless dungeon, nor strong links of iron,
Can be retentive to the strength of spirit. Shakesp.
If he smite him with an instrument of iron, so that he die, he is a murderer. Numb. xxxv. 16.
The power of drawing iron is one of the ideas of a loadstone, and to be so drawn, is a part of that of iron.
Locke.
In a piece of iron ore, of a ferruginous colour, are several thin plates, placed parallel to each other.
Woodward.
There are incredible quantities of iron slag in various parts of the forest of Dean. Woodward.
Iron stone lies in strata. Woodward on Fossils.
I treated of making iron work, and steel work.
Moxon.

2. Any instrument or utensil made of iron: as, a flat iron, box iron, or smoothing iron. In this sense it has a plural.

Irons of a doit, doublets that hangmen would
Bury with those that wore them, these base slaves,
Ere yet the fight be done, pack up. Shak. Coriolanus.
O I hou! whose captain I account myself,
Look on my forces with a gracious eye:
Put in their hands thy bruising irons of wrath,
That they may crush down with a heavy fall
Th' usurping helmets of our adversaries. Sh. R. III.
Can'st thou fill his skin with barbed irons, or his head with fishspears? Job, xli. 7.
For this your locks in paper-durance bound?
For this with tort'ring irons wreath'd around? Pope.

3. Chain; shackle; manacle: as, he was put in irons.

The iron entered into his soul. Psalms. Com. Prayer.
His feet they hurt with fetters; he was laid in irons. Ps.

I'RON. adj.

1. Made of iron.

In iron walls they deem'd me not secure. Shakesp.
Get me an iron crow, and bring it straight
Unto my cell. Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.
Some are of an iron red, shining and polite; others not polite, but as if powdered with iron dust.
Woodward.
Pole-cats and weesels do a great deal of injury to warrens; the way of taking them is in hutches, and iron traps. Mortimer.

2. Resembling iron in colour.

A piece of stone of a dark iron grey colour, but in some parts of a ferruginous colour. Woodward.
Some of them are of an iron red, and very bright.
Woodward on Fossils.

3. Harsh; severe; rigid; miserable; calamitous: as, the iron age for an age of hardship and wickedness. Those ideas may be found more or less in all the following examples.

Three vigorous virgins, waiting still behind
Assist the throne of th' iron sceptered king. Crashaw.
O sad virgin, that thy power
Might bid the soul of Orpheus sing
Such notes as warbled to the string,
Drew iron tears from Pluto's cheek,
And made hell grant what love did seek. Milton.
In all my iron years of wars and dangers,
From blooming youth down to decaying age,
My fame ne'er knew a stain of dishonour. Rowe.
Jove crush the nations with an iron rod,
And ev'ry monarch be the scourge of God. Pope.

4. Indissoluble; unbroken.

Rash Elpenor, in an evil hour,
Dry'd an immeasurable bowl, and thought
T' exhale his surfeit by irriguous sleep,
Imprudent: him death's iron sleep oppress. Phillips.

5. Hard; impenetrable.

I will converse with iron-witted fools,
And unrespective boys: none are for me,
That look into me with considerate eyes. Shakesp.

To I'RON. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To smooth with an iron.

2. To shackle with irons.

IRO'NICAL. adj. [ironique, Fr. from irony.] Expressing one thing and meaning another; speaking by contraries.

In this fallacy may be comprised all ironical mistakes, or expressions receiving inverted significations. Browne.
I take all your ironical civilities in a literal sense, and shall expect them to be literally performed.
Swift.

IRO'NICALLY. adv. [from ironical.] By the use of irony.

Socrates

Socrates was pronounced by the oracle of Delphos to be the wiſeſt man of Greece, which he would turn from himſelf ironically, ſaying, There could be nothing in him to verify the oracle, except this, that he was not wiſe, and knew it; and others were not wiſe, and knew it not. Bacon.

The dean, ironically grave,
Still ſhunn'd the fool, and laſh'd the knave. Swift.

IRONMO'NGER. n. ſ. [iron and monger.] A dealer in iron.

I'RONWOOD. n. ſ. A kind of wood extremely hard, and ſo ponderous as to ſink in water. It grows in America. Robinſon Cruſoe.

I'RONWORT. n. ſ. [ſideritis, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

I'RONY. adj. [from iron.] Made of iron; partaking of iron.

The force they are under is real, and that of their fate but imaginary: it is not ſtrange if the irony chains have more ſolidity than the contemplative. Hammond's Fundamentals.

Some ſprings of Hungary, highly impregnated with vitriolick ſalts, diſſolve the body of one metal, ſuppoſe iron, put into the ſpring; and depoſit, in lieu of the irony particles carried off, coppery particles. Woodward on Foſſils.

I'RONY. n. ſ. [ironie, Fr. ἰρωνεία.] A mode of ſpeech in which the meaning is contrary to the words: as, Bolingbroke was a holy man.

So grave a body, upon ſo ſolemn an occaſion, ſhould not deal in irony, or explain their meaning by contraries. Swift.

IRRA'DIANCE. } n. ſ. [irradiance, French;
IRRA'DIANCY. } irradio, Latin.]

1. Emiſſion of rays or beams of light upon any object.

The principal affection is its tranſlucency: the irradiancy and ſparkling, found in many gems, is not diſcoverable in this. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

2. Beams of light emitted.

Love not the heav'nly ſpirits? Or do they mix
Irradiance virtual, or immediate touch? Milton.

To IRRA'DIATE. v. a. [irradio, Latin.]

1. To adorn with light emitted upon it; to brighten.

When he thus perceives that theſe opacous bodies do not hinder the eye from judging light to have an equal plenary diffuſion through the whole place it irradiates, he can have no difficulty to allow air, that is diaphanous, to be every where mingled with light. Digby on Bodies.

It is not a converting but a crowning grace; ſuch as one as irradiates and puts a circle of glory about the head of him upon whom it deſcends. South.

2. To enlighten; to illumine; to illuminate.

Celeſtial light
Shine inward, and the mind through all her pow'rs
Irradiate; there plant eyes; all miſt from thence Purge and diſperſe. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

3. To animate by heat or light.

Your dinner, and the generous islanders
By you invited do attend your presence. Shakesp.

There are many bitter sayings against islanders in general, representing them as fierce, treacherous, and unhospitable: those who live on the continent have such frequent intercourse with men of different religions and languages, that they become more kind than those who are the inhabitants of an island.
Addison's Freeholder.

A race of rugged mariners are these,
Unpolish'd men, and boist'rous as their seas;
The native islanders alone their care,
And hateful he that breathes a foreign air. Pope.

ISLE. n. s. [isle, French; insula, Latin. Pronounced ile.]

1. An

1. An island; a country surrounded by water.

The instalment of this noble duke
In the seat royal of this famous isle. Shakesp.

The dreadful fight
Betwixt a nation and two whales I write;
Seas stain'd with gore I sing, advent'rous toil,
And how these monsters did disarm an isle. Waller.

2. [Written, I think, corruptly for aile, from aile, Fr. from ala, Latin, the aile being probably at first only a wing or side walk. It may come likewise from allée, French, a walk.] A long walk in a church or publick building.

O'er the twilight groves and dusky caves,
Long founding isles and intermingled graves
Black melancholy sits. Pope.

ISOSCELES. n. s. [ἴσος, σκέλος, and μῆκος,] In geometry, are such figures as have equal perimeters or circumferences, of which the circle is the greatest. Harris.

ISOSCELES. n. s. [isoscele, Fr. or equiangular triangle.] That which hath only two sides equal. Harris.

ISSUE. n. s. [issue, French.]

1. The act of passing out.

2. Exit; egress; or passage out.

Unto the Lord belong the issues from death. Psalms

Let us examine what bodies touch a moveable whilst in motion, as the only means to find an issue out of the difficulty. Digby on Bodies.

We might have easily prevented those great returns of money to France; and if it be true the French are so impoverished, in what condition must they have been, if that issue of wealth had been stopped? Swift.

3. Event; consequence.

Spirits are not finely touch'd,
But to fine issues. Shakesp. Meas. for Meas.

If I were ever fearful
To do a thing, where I the issue doubted,
Whereof the execution did cry out
Against the non-performance, 'twas a fear
Which oft infects the wisest. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

But let the issue correspondent prove
To good beginnings of each enterprize. Fairfax.

If things were cast upon this issue, that God should never prevent sin till man deserved it, the best would sin, and sin for ever. South.

The wittiest sayings and sentences will be found the issues of chance, and nothing else but so many lucky hits of a roving fancy. South.

Our present condition is better for us in the issue, than that uninterrupted health and security that the Atheist desires. Bentley.

4. Termination; conclusion.

He hath preserved Argalus alive, under pretence of having him publickly executed after these wars, of which they hope for a soon and prosperous issue. Sidney.

What issue of my love remains for me!
How wild a passion works within my breast!
With what prodigious flames am I possest! Dryden

Homer, at a loss to bring difficult matters to an issue, lays his hero asleep, and this solves the difficulty. Broome.

5. Sequel deduced from premises.

I am to pray you not to strain my speech
To grosser issues, nor to larger reach,
Than to suspicion. Shakesp. Othello.

6. A fontanel; a vent made in a muscle for the discharge of humours.

This tumour in his left arm was caused by strict binding of his issue. Wiseman

7. Evacuation.

A woman was diseased with an issue of blood. Mat. ix. 20.

8. Progeny; offspring.

O nation miserable
Since that the truest issue of thy throne,
By his own interdiction stands accurst. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Nor where Abassin kings their issue guard,
Mount Amara, though this by some supposed
True Paradise, under the the Æthiop line
By Nilus' head. Milton's Paradise Lost.

This old peaceful prince, as Heav'n decreed,
Was blest'd with no male issue to succeed. Dryden's Æn.

The frequent productions of monsters, in all the species of animals, and strange issues of human birth, carry with them difficulties, not possible to consist with this hypothesis. Locke.

9. [In law.] Issue hath divers applications in the common law: sometimes used for the children begotten between a man and his wife; sometimes for profits growing from an amercement, fine, or expences of suit; sometimes for profits of lands or tenements; sometimes for that point of matter depending in suit, whereupon the parties join and put their cause to the trial of the jury. Issue is either general or special: general issue seemeth to be that whereby it is referred to the jury to bring in their verdict, whether the defendant have done any such thing as the plaintiff layeth to his charge. The special issue then must be that, where special matter being alleged by the defendant for his defence, both the parties join thereupon, and so grow rather to a demurrer, if it be quæstio juris, or to trial by the jury, if it be quæstio facti. Cowel.

To ISSUE. v. n. [from the noun; issuer, French; uscire, Italian.]

1. To come out; to pass out of any place.

Waters issued out from under the threshold of the house. Exek.

From the utmost end of the head branches there issueth out a gummy juice. Raleigh's History.

Waters issu'd from a cave. Milton.

Ere Pallas issu'd from the thunderer's head,

2. To make an eruption; to break out.

Three of master Ford's brothers watch the door with pistols, that none should issue out, otherwise you might slip away. Shakesp.

See that none hence issue forth a spy. Milton.

Haste, arm your Argeans, issue to the plain;
With faith to friend, assault the Trojan train. Dryden.

At length there issu'd from the grove behind,
A fair assembly of the female kind. Dryden.

A buzzing noise of bees his ears alarms;
Straight issue through the sides assembling swarms. Dryden.

Full for the port the Ithacensians stand,
And furl their sails, and issue on the land. Pope's Odyssey.

3. To proceed as an offspring.

Of thy sons that shall issue from thee, which thou shalt beget, shall they take away. 2 Kings. xx. 18.

4. To be produced by any fund.

These altarages issued out of the offerings made to the altar, and were payable to the priesthood Ayliffe's Parergon.

5. To run out in lines.

Pipes made with a belly towards the lower end, and then issuing into a straight concave again. Bacon.

To ISSUE. v. a.

1. To send out; to send forth.

A weak degree of heat is not able either to digest the parts or to issue the spirits. Bacon's Natural History.

The commissioners should issue money out to no other use. Temp.

2. To send out judicially or authoritatively. This is the more frequent sense. It is commonly followed by a particle, out or forth.

If the council issued out any order against them, or if the king sent a proclamation for their repair to their houses, some noblemen published a protestation. Clarendon.

Deep in a rocky cave he makes abode,
A mansion proper for a mourning god:
Here he gives audience, issuing out decrees
To rivers, his dependant deities. Dryden.

In vain the master issues out commands,
In vain the trembling sailors ply their hands;
The tempest unforeseen prevents their care. Dryd.

They constantly wait in court to make a due return of what they have done, and to receive such other commands as the judge shall issue forth. Ayliffe's Parergon.

ISSUELESS. adj. [from issue.] Having no offspring; wanting descendants.

Carew, by virtue of this entail, succeeded to Hugh's portion, as dying issueless. Carew's Survey of Cornwall

I have done sin;
For which the Heavens, taking angry note,
Have left me issueless. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

ISTHMUS. n. s. [isthmus, Latin.] A neck of land joining the peninsula to the continent.

There is a castle strongly seated on a high rock, which joineth by an isthmus to the land, and is impregnably fortified. Sandys's Travels.

The Assyrian empire stretcheth northward to that isthmus between the Euxine and the Caspian Sea. Brerewood on Languages.

O life, thou nothing's younger brother!
Thou weak built isthmus, that dost proudly rise
Up betwixt two eternities,
Yet can't not wave nor wind sustain;
But broken and o'erwhelm'd the ocean meets again. Cowley.

Our church of England stands as Corinth between two seas, and there are some busy in cutting the isthmus, to let in both at once upon it. Stilling fleet.

Cleomenes thinking it more advisable to fortify not the isthmus, but the mountains, put his design in execution. Creech.

Plac'd on this isthmus of a middle state,
A being darkly wise, and rudely great. Pope.

IT. pronoun. [Hit, Saxon.]

1. The neutral demonstrative. Used in speaking of things. For it, our ancestors used he, as the neutral pronoun; and for its they used his. Thus in the Accidence, a noun adjective is that which cannot stand by himself, but requireth another word to be joined with him to shew his signification.

Nothing can give that to another which it hath not itself. Bramhall against Hobbes.

Will our great anger learn to stoop so low?
I know it cannot. Cowley.

Tell me, O tell, what kind of thing is wit,
Thou who matter art of it. Cowley.

His son, it may be, dreads no harm;
But kindly waits his father's coming home. Flatman.

The time will come, it will, when you shall know
The rage of love. Dryden.

How can I speak; or how, sir, can you hear?
Imagine that which you would most deplore,
And that which I would speak, is it or more. Dryden.

A mind so furnished, what reason has it to acquiesce in its conclusions? Locke.

The glory which encompassed them covered the place, and darted its rays with so much strength, that the whole fabrick began to melt. Addison.

If we find a greater good in the present constitution, than would have accrued either from the total privation of it, or from other frames and structures, we may then reasonably conclude, that the present constitution proceeded from an intelligent, and good being, that formed it that particular way out of choice. Bentley.

2. It is used absolutely for the state of a person or affair:

How is it with our general?

——Even so

As with a man by his own alms imprison'd,
And with his charity slain. Shakesp. Coriolanus

3. It is used for the thing; the matter; the affair.

It's come to pass,
That tractable obedience is a slave
To each incensed will. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

4. It is sometimes expressed by 't.

He rallied, and again fell to 't;
For catching foe by nearer foot,
He lifted with such might and strength.
As would have hurl'd him thrice his length. Hudib.

The design it seems, is to avoid the dreadful imputation of pedantry. Swift.

5. It is used ludicrously after neutral verbs, to give an emphasis.

If Abraham brought all with him, it is not probable that he meant to walk it back again for his pleasure. Raleigh.

The Lacedemonians, at the straights of Thermopylæ, when their arms failed them, fought it out with their nails and teeth Dryden.

I have often seen people lavish it profusely in tricking up their children, and yet starve their minds. Locke.

The mole courses it not on the ground, like the rat or mouse, but lives under the earth. Addison.

Whether the charmer sinner it, or saint it,
If folly grows romantick, I must paint it. Pope.

6. Sometimes applied familiarly, ludicrously, or rudely to persons.

Let us after him,
Whose care is gone before to bid us welcome:
It is a peerless kinsman. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Do, child, go to it grandam, child:
Give grandam kingdom, and its grandam will Give it up him. Shakespeare's King John.

7. It is sometimes used of the first or second person, sometimes of more. This mode of speech, though used by good authors, and supported by the il y a of the French, has yet an appearance of barbarism.

Who was't came by?
—'Tis two or three, my lord, that bring you word
Macduff is fled to England. Shakesp. Macbeth.

City,
'Tis I, that made thy widows. Shak. Coriolanus.

'Tis these that early taint the female soul, Pope.

ITCH. n. s. [yicha, Saxon.]

1. A cutaneous disease extremely contagious, which overspreads the body with small pustules filled with a thin serum, and raised, as microscopes have discovered, by a small animal. It is cured by sulphur.

Lust and liberty
Creep in the minds and marrows of our youths,
That 'gainst the stream of virtue they may strive,
And drown themselves in riot, itches, blains. Shak.

The Lord will smite thee with the scab and with the itch, whereof thou can'st not be healed. Deut xxviii. 27.

As if divinity had catch'd
The itch on purpose to be scratch'd. Hudibras.

2. The sensation of uneasiness in the skin, which is eased by rubbing.

3. A constant teazing desire.

A certain itch of meddling with other people's matters, puts us upon shifting. L'Estrange.

He had still pedigree in his head, and an itch of being thought a divine king. Dryden.

From servant's company a child isto be kept, not not by prohibitions, for that will but give him an itch after it, but by other ways. Locke.

At half mankind when gen'rous Manly raves,
All know 'tis virtue, for he thinks them knaves:
When universal homage Umbra pays,
All see 'tis vice, and itch of vulgar praise. Pope.

To ITCH. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To feel the uneasiness in the skin which is removed by rubbing.

A troublesome itching of the part was occasioned by want of transpiration. Wiseman's Surgery.

My sight eyes [illegible] some good luck is near;
Perhaps my Arse [illegible] may appear. Dryden.

2. To long; to have continual desire. This sense appears in the following examples, though some of them are equivocal.

Master Shallow, you have yourself been a great fighter, though now a man of peace. Mr. Page, though now I be old, and of the peace, if I see a sword out, my finger itches to make one. Shakesp.

Cassius, you yourself
Are much condemn'd to have an itching palm,
To sell and mart your offices for gold. Shakesp.

The itching ears being an epidemick disease, gave fair opportunity to every mountebank. Decay of Piety.

All such have still an itching to deride,
And fain would be upon the laughing side. Pope.

ITCHY. adj. [from itch.] Infected with the itch.

ITEM. adv. [Latin.] Also. A word used when any article is added to the former.

ITEM. n. s.

1. A new article.

I could have looked on him without the help of admiration, though the catalogue of his endowments had been tabled by his side and I to peruse him by items. Shakesp.

2. A hint; an inuendo.

If this discourse have not concluded our weakness, I have one item more of mine: if knowledge can be found, I must lose that which I thought I had, that there is none. Glanv.

To ITERATE. v. a. [itero, Lat.]

1. To repeat; to utter again; to inculcate by frequent mention.

We covet to make the psalms especially familiar unto all: this is the very cause why we iterate the Psalms oftener than any other part of Scripture besides: the cause wherefore we inure the people together with their minister, and not the minister alone, to read them, as other parts of scripture he doth. Hooker.

In the first ages God gave laws unto our fathers, and their memories served instead of books; whereof the imperfections being known to God, he relieved the same by often putting them in mind: in which respect we see how many times one thing hath been iterated into the best and wisest. Hooker.

The king, to keep a decency towards the French king, sent new solemn ambassadors to intimate unto him the decree of his estates, and to iterate his motion that the French would desist from hostility. Bacon's Henry VII.

There be two kinds of reflections of sounds; the one at distance, which is the echo, wherein the original is heard distinctly, and the reflection also distinctly: the other in concurrence, when the sound returneth immediately upon the original, and so iteratetb it not, but amplifieth it. Bacon.

2. To do over again.

Ashes burnt, and well reverberated by fire, after the salt thereof hath been drawn out by iterated decoctions. Brown.

Adam took no thought,
Eating his fill; nor Eve to iterate
Her former trespass fear'd, the more to sooth
Him with her lov'd society. Milton's Paradise Lost.

ITERANT. adj. [iterans,] Lat. Repeating.

Waters being near, make a current echo; but being farther off, they make an iterant echo.
Bacon's Natural History.

ITERATION. n. s. [iteration, Fr. iteratio, Lat.] Repetition; recital over again.

Truth tir'd with iteration
As true as steel, as plantage to the moon. Shakesp.

My husband!
——Ay, 'twas he that told me first.
——My husband!
——What needs this iteration, woman?
I say, thy husband. Shakesp. Othello.

Iterations are commonly loss of time; but there is no such gain of time, as to iterate often the state of the question; for it chaseth away many a frivolous speech. Bacon's Essays.

In all these respects, it hath a peculiar property to engage the receiver to persevere in all piety, and is farther improved by the frequent iteration and repetition. Hammond.

ITINERANT. adj. [itinerant, Fr.] Wandering; not settled.

It should be my care to sweeten and mellow the voices of itinerant tradesmen, as also to accomodate their cries to their respective wares. Addis. Spect.

ITINERARY. n. s. [itineraire, Fr. itinerarium, Lat.] A book of travels.

The clergy are sufficiently reproached, in most itineraries, for the universal poverty one meets with in this plentiful kingdom. Addison on Italy.

ITINERARY. adj. [itinerarie, Fr. itinerarius, Lat.] Travelling; done on a journey; done during frequent change of place.

He did make a progress from Lincoln to the northern parts, though it was rather an itinerary circuit of justice than a progress. Bacon's Henry VII.

ITSELF. pronoun. [it and self.] The neutral reciprocal pronoun applied to things.

Who then shall blame
His pester'd senses, to recoil and start,
When all that is within him does condemn
Itself for being there? Shakesp. Macbeth.

Borrowing of foreigners, in itself, makes not the kingdom rich or poor. Locke.

JUBILANT. adj. [jubilans, Latin.] Uttering sons of triumph.

The planets list'ning stood,
While the bright pomp ascended jubilant. Milton.

JUBILATION. n. s. [jubilation, Fr. jubilatio, Lat.] The act of declaring triumph.

JUBILEE. n. s. [jubile, Fr. jubilum, from jubilo, low Lat.] A publick festivity; a time of rejoicing; a season of joy.

Angels utt'ring joy, heav'n rang
With jubilee, and loud hosannas filled
Th' eternal regions. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Joy was then a masculine and a severe thing, the recreation of the judgment, or rejoicing the jubilee of reason. South.

The town was all a jubilee of feasts. Dryden.

JUCUNDITY. n. s. [jucunditas, jucundus, Lat.] Pleasantness; agreeableness.

The new or unexpected jucundities, which present themselves, will have activity enough to excite the earthiest soul, and raise a smile from the most composed tempers. Brown.

Paul judaiz'd with the Jews, was all to all. Hammond.

JUDGE. n. s. [juge, F.. judex, Lat.]

1. One who is invested with authority to determine any cause or question, real or personal.

Shall not the judge of all the earth do right?
Genesis.

A father of the fatherless, and a judge of the widows, is God in his holy habitation. Psalms.

Thou art judge
Of all things made, and judgest only right. Milt.

2. One who presides in a court of judicature.

My lord Bassanio gave his ring away
Unto the judge that begg'd it. Shak. Mer. of Venice.

A single voice; and that not past me, but
By learned approbation of the judge. Shak. H. VIII.

How dares your pride,
As in a listed field to fight your cause,
Unask'd the royal grant; nor marshal by,
As knightly rites require, nor judge to try? Dryden.

It is not sufficient to imitate nature in every circumstance dully: it becomes a painter to take what is most beautiful, as being the sovereign judge of his own art. Dryden.

3. One who has skill sufficient to decide upon the merit of any thing.

One court there is in which he who knows the secrets of every heart will sit judge himself. Sherlock.
A perfect judge will read each piece of wit,
With the same spirit that its author writ. Pope.

To JUDGE. v. a. [juger, Fr. judico, Lat.]

1. To pass sentence.
My wrong be upon thee; the Lord judge between thee and me. Genesis.
Ye judge not for man, but for the Lord, who is with you in the judgment. 2. Chron.

2. To form or give an opinion.
Beshrew me, but I love her heartily;
For she is wise, if I can judge aright. Shakesp.
Authors to themselves,
Both what they judge and what they chuse. Milt.
If I did not know the originals, I should never be able to judge, by the copies, which was Virgil and which Ovid. Dryden.
Whether it be a divine revelation or no, reason must judge, which can never permit the mind to reject a greater evidence, to embrace what is less evident Locke.
He proceeds in his inquiry into sciences, resolved to judge of them freely. Locke.

3. To discern; to distinguish; to consider accurately.
How doth God know? Can he judge through the dark cloud? Job. xxii. 13.
Judge in yourselves: is it comely a woman pray unto God uncovered? 1 Cor. xi. 13.
How properly the tories may be called the whole body of the British nation, I leave to any one's judging. Addison.

To JUDGE. v. a.

1. To pass sentence upon; to examine authoritatively; to determine finally.
Chaos shall judge the strife. Milton.
Then those, whom form of laws
Condemn'd to die, when traitors judg'd their cause. Dryden.

2. To pass severe censure; to doom severely. This is a sense seldom found but in the Scriptures.
He shall judge among the heathen, he shall fill the places with the dead bodies. Ps. cx. 6.
Judge not, that ye be not judged. Matthew.
Let no man judge you in meat or drink. Col. ii.

JU'DGER. n. s. [from judge.] One who forms judgment; or passes sentence.
The vulgar threatened to be their oppressors, and judgers of their judges. King Charles.
They who guide themselves merely by what appears, are ill judgers of what they have not well examined. Digby.

JU'DGMENT. n. s. [jugement, Fr.]

1. The power of discerning the relations between one term or one proposition and another.
O judgment! thou art fled to brutish beasts,
And men have lost their reason. Shak. Julius Cæsar.
The faculty, which God has given man to supply the want of certain knowledge, is judgment, whereby the mind takes any proposition to be true or false, without perceiving a demonstrative evidence in the proofs. Locke.
Judgment is that whereby we join ideas together by affirmation or negation; so, this tree is high. Watts.

2. Doom; the right or power of passing judgment.
If my suspect be false, forgive me, God;
For judgment only doth belong to thee. Shakesp.

3. The act of exercising judicature; judicatory.
They gave judgment upon him. 2 Kings.
When thou, O Lord, shalt stand disclos'd
In majesty severe,
And sit in judgement on my soul,
O how shall I appear? Addison's Spectator.

4. Determination; decision.
Where distinctions or identities are purely material, the judgment is made by the imagination, otherwise by the understanding. Glanville's Scepsis.
We shall make a certain judgment what kind of dissolution that earth was capable of. Burn. Theory.

JU'GGLER. n. s. [from juggle.]

1. One who practises slight of hand; one who deceives the eye by nimble conveyance.
They say this town is full of cozenage,
As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye,
Drug-working sorcerers that change the mind,
Disguised cheaters, prating mountebanks,
And many such like libertines of sin. Shak.

I saw a juggler that had a pair of cards, and would tell a man what card he thought. Bacon.

Aristæus was a famous poet, that flourished in the days of Cræsus, and a notable juggler. Sandys.

Fortune-tellers, jugglers, and impostors, do daily delude them. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

The juggler which another's slight can show,
But teaches how the world his own may know.
Garth.

One who is managed by a juggler fancies he has money in hand; but let him grasp it never so carefully, upon a word or two it increases or dwindles. Addison's Freeholder.

What magick makes our money rise,
When dropt into the southern main;
Or do these jugglers cheat our eyes? Swift.

2. A cheat; a trickish fellow.

O me, you juggler; oh, you canker blossom,
You thief of love; what, have you come by night,
And stol'n my love's heart from him. Shakesp.

I sing no harm
To officer, juggler, or justice of peace. Donne.

Unnumber'd fruits,
A friendly juice to cool thirst's rage contain. Thomson.

2. The fluid in animal bodies.

Juice in language is less than blood; for if the words be but becoming and signifying, and the sense gentle, there is juice: but where that wanteth, the language is thin, scarce covering the bone. Ben Jonson's Discovery.

An animal whose juices are unsound can never be nourished: unsound juices can never repair the fluids. Arbuthnot.

JU'ICELESS; adj. [from juice.] Dry; without moisture; without juice.

Divine Providence has spread her table every where; not with a juiceless green carpet, but with succulent herbage and nourishing grass. More.

When Boreas' spirit blusters sore,
Beware th' inclement heav'ns; now let thy hearth
Crackle with juiceless boughs. Phillips.

To JUMBLE. v. a. [in Chaucer, jombre, from combler, French, Skinner.] To mix violently and confusedly together.

Persons and humours may be jumbled and disguised; but nature, like quicksilver, will never be killed. L'Estrange.

A verbal concordance leads not always to texts of the same meaning, and one may observe, how apt that is to jumble together passages of Scripture, and thereby disturb the true meaning of holy Scripture. Locke.

Writing is but just like dice,
And lucky mains make people wise;
And jumbled words if fortune throw 'em,
Shall, well as Dryden, form a poem. Prior.

Is it not a firmer foundation for tranquility, to believe that all things were created, and are ordered for the best, than that the universe is mere bungling and blundering; all ill-favouredly cobbled and jumbled together by the unguided agitation and rude shuffles of matter? Bentley.

How tragedy and comedy embrace,
How farce and epick get a jumbled race. Pope.

That the universe was formed by a fortuitous concourse of atoms, I will no more believe, than that the accidental jumbling of the alphabet would fall into a most ingenious treatise of philosophy. Swift.

To JU'MBLE. v. n. To be agitated together.

They will all meet and jumble together, into a perfect harmony. Swift.

JU'MBLE. n. s. [from the verb.] Confused mixture; violent and confused agitation.

And rank me with the barb'rous natives. Shakesp.

Herein perchance he jumps not with Lajus. Hakewill.

Never did trusty squire with knight,
Or knight with squire, e'er jump more right;
Their arms and equipage did fit,
As well as virtues, parts, and wit. Hudibras.

This shews how perfectly the rump
And commonwealth, in nature jump:
For as a fly that goes to bed,
Rests with his tail above his head;
So in this mungrel state of ours,
The rabble are the supreme powers Hudibras.

Good wits jump, and mine the nimblest of the two. More.

Good now, how your devotions jump with mine! Dryden.

I am happier for finding our judgment jump in the notion. Pope to Swift.

I shall find your lordship judge and juror,
You are so merciful, I see your end,
'Tis my undoing. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

I sing no harm, good sooth! to any wight,
Juror, or judge. Donne.

About noon the jurors went together, and because they could not agree, they were shut in. Hayward.

JU'RY. n. s. [jurata, Lat. juré, French.]

Jury, a company of men, as twenty-four, or twelve, sworn to deliver a truth upon such evidence as shall be delivered them touching the matter in question. There be three manners of trials in England: one by parliament, another by battle, and the third by assize or jury. The trial by assize, be the action civil or criminal, publick or private, personal or real, is referred for the fact to a jury, who as they find it, so passeth the judgment. This jury is used not only in circuits of justices errant, but also in other courts, and matters of office, as, if the escheatour make inquisition in any thing touching his office, he doth it by a jury of inquest: if the coroner inquire how a subject found dead came to his end, he useth an inquest: the justices of peace in the quarter-sessions, the sheriff in his county and turn, the bailiff of a hundred, the steward of a court-leet or court-baron, if they inquire of any offence, or decide any cause between party and party, they do it by the same manner: so that where it is said, that all things be triable by parliament, battle, or assize; assize, in this place, is taken for a jury or inquest, empannelled upon any cause in a court where this kind of trial is used. This jury, though it appertain to most courts of the common law, yet it is most notorious in the half-year courts of the justices errants, commonly called the great assizes, and in the quarter-sessions, and in them it is most ordinarily called a jury, and that in civil causes; whereas in other courts it is often termed an inquest. In the general assize, there are usually many juries, because there be store of causes, both civil and criminal, commonly to be tried, whereof one is called the grand jury, and the rest petit juries. The grand jury consists ordinarily of twenty-four grave and substantial gentlemen, or some of them yeomen, chosen indifferently out of the whole shire by the sheriff, to consider of all bills of indictment preferred to the court; which they do either approve by writing upon them these words, billa vera, or dislike by writing ignoramus. Such as they do approve, if they touch life and death, are further referred to another jury to be considered of, because the case is of such importance; but others of lighter moment are, upon their allowance, without more work, fined by the bench, except the party traverse the indictment, or challenge it for insufficiency, or remove the cause to a higher court by certiorari; in which two former cases it is referred to another jury, and in the latter transmitted to the higher court. Those that pass upon civil causes real, are all, or so many as can conveniently be had, of the same hundred where the land or tenement in question doth lie, and four at the least; and they, upon due examination, bring in their verdict either for the demandant or tenant; according unto which, judgment passeth afterward in the court where the cause first began; and the reason hereof is, because those justices of assize are, in this case, for the ease of the countries only to take the verdict of the jury by the virtue of the writ called nisi prius, and so return it to the court where the cause is depending. Cowel.

The jury passing on the prisoner's life,
May in the sworn twelve have a thief or two
Guiltier than him they try.
Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

How innocent I was,
His noble jury and foul cause can witness. Shakespeare.

Clodius was acquitted by a corrupt jury, that had palpably taken shares of money before they gave up their verdict. Bacon.

JU'RYMAN. n. s. [jury and man.] One who is impannelled on a jury.

The hungry judges soon the sentence sign,
And wretches hang that jurymen may dine. Pope.

No judge was known upon or off the bench, to use the least insinuation, that might affect the interest interests of any one single juryman, much less of a whole jury. Swift

JU'RYMAST. n. s. It seems to be properly durve mast, mât de durée, a mast made to last for the present occasion. So the seamen call whatever they set up in the room of a mast lost in a fight or by a storm; being some great yard which they put down into the step of that lost mast, fastening it into the partners, and fitting to it the missen or some lesser yard with sails and ropes, and with it make a shift to sail. Harris.

What news? hold those justs and triumph? Shakesp.

Among themselves the tourney they divide,
In equal squadrons rang'd on either side;
Then turn'd their horses heads, and man to man,
And steed to steed oppos'd, the justs began. Dryden.

To JUST. v. n. [jouster, French.]

1. To engage in a mock fight; to tilt.
2. To push; to drive; to justle.

JUSTICE. n. s. [justice, French; justitia, Latin.]

1. The virtue by which we give to every man, what is his due; opposed to injury or wrong. It is either distributive belonging to magistrates; or commutative, respecting common transactions between men.

O that I were judge, I would do justice. 2 Sam
The king-becoming graces,
As justice, verity, temp'rance, stableness,
I have no relish of them. Shakesp. Macbeth.

The nature and office of justice being to dispose the mind to a constant and perpetual readiness to render to every man his due, it is evident, that gratitude be a part of justice; it must be conversant about something that is due to another. Locke.

2. Equity; agreeableness to right; as, he proved the justice of his claim.

3. Vindicative retribution; punishment; opposed to mercy.

He executed the justice of the Lord. Deut.
Let justice overtake us. Isa. lix. 9.
Examples of justice must be made for terror to some; examples of mercy, for comfort to others. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

4. Right; assertion of right.

Draw thy sword,
That if my speech offend a noble heart,
Thy arm may do thee justice. Shakesp. King Lear.

5. [Justiciarius, Lat.] One deputed by the king to do right by way of judgment. Cowel.

And thou, Eldrax, ordain judges and justices, that they may judge in all Syria. Eldras.

6. JU'STICE of the King's Bench. [justiciarius de Banco Regis.] Is a lord by his office, and the chief of the rest; wherefore he is also called capitalis justiciarius Angliæ. His office especially is to hear and determine all pleas of the crown; that is, such as concern offences committed against the crown, dignity, and peace of the king; as treasons, felonies, mayhem, and such like: but it is come to pass, that he with his assistants heareth all personal actions, and real also, if they be incident to any personal action depending before them. Cowel.

Give that whipster his errand,
He'll take my lord chief justice' warrant. Pope

7. JU'STICE of the Common Pleas. [justiciarius Communium Placitorum.] Is a lord by his office, and is called dominus justiciarius communium placitorum. He with his assistants originally did hear and determine all causes at the common law, that is, all civil causes between common persons, as well personal as real, for which cause it was called the court of common pleas, in opposition to the pleas of the crown, or the king's pleas, which are special, and appertaining to him only. Cowel.

8. JU'STICE of the Forest. [justiciarius Forestæ.] Is a lord by his office, and hath the hearing and determining of all offences within the king's forest, committed against vert or venison, of these there be two, whereof the one hath jurisdiction over all the forests on this side Trent, and the other of all beyond. Cowel.

9. JU'STICES of Assize. [justiciarii ad capiendas Assisas.] Are such as were wont, by special commission, to be sent into this or that country to take assises; the ground of which polity was the ease of the subjects; for whereas these actions pass always by jury, so many men might not, without great hinderance, be brought to London; and therefore justices, for this purpose, were by commission particularly authorised and sent down to them. Cowel.

10. JU'STICES in Eyre. [justiciarii itinerantes.] Are so termed of the French erre, iter. The use of these, in ancient time, was to send them with commission into divers counties, to hear such causes especially as were termed the pleas of the crown, and therefore I must imagine they were sent abroad for the ease of the subjects, who must else have been hurried to the King's Bench, if the cause were too high for the county court. They differed from the justices of Oyer and Terminer, because they were sent upon some one or few especial cases, and to one place; whereas the justices in eyre were sent through the provinces and countries of the land, with more indefinite and general commission. Cowel.

11. JUSTICES of Gaol Delivery. [Justiciarii ad Gaolas deliberandas.] Are such as are sent with commission to hear and determine all causes appertaining to such as for any offence are cast into gaol, part of whose authority is to punish such as let to mainprise those prisoners that by law be not bailable. These by Fleetwood, in ancient time, were sent to countries upon several occasions; but afterward justices of assise were likewise authorised to this. Cowel.

12. JUSTICES of Nisi Prius are all one now-a-days with justices of assise; for it is a common adjournment of a cause, in the common pleas, to put it off to such a day; nisi prius justiciarii venerint ibi quas partes ad capiendas assisas; and upon this clause of adjournment they are called justices of nisi prius, as well as justices of assise, by reason of the writ or action that they have to deal in. Cowel.

13. JUSTICES of Peace. [Justiciarii ad Pacem.] Are they that are appointed by the king's commission, with others, to attend the peace of the country where they dwell; of whom some, upon especial respect, are made of the quorum, because some business of importance may not be dealt in without the presence of them, or one of them. Cowel.

The justice,
In fair round belly with good capon lin'd,
With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut,
Full of wise saws and modern instances;
And so he plays his part. Shakesp. As you like it.

Thou hast appointed justices of the peace to call poor men before them, about matters they were not able to answer. Shakesp.

The justices of peace are of great use: anciently they were conservators of the peace; these are the words of several acts of parliament have enlarged their jurisdiction. Bacon.

To JUSTICE. v. a. [from the noun.] To administer justice to any. A word not in use.

Acton the title of proscription, wherein the emperor hath been judge and party, and hath justiced himself, God forbid but that it should endure an appeal to a war. Bacon.

Whereas one Styward, a Scot, was apprehended for intending to poison the young queen of Scots; the king delivered him to the French king, to be justiced by him at his pleasure. Heywood.

JUSTICEMENT. n. s. [from justice.] Procedure in courts.

JUSTICER. n. s. [from To justice.] Administrator of justice. An old word.

He was a singular good justicer; and if he had not died in the second year of his government, was the likeliest person to have reformed the English colonies. Davies on Ireland.

JUSTICESHIP. n. s. [from justice.] Rank or office of justice. Scurft.

JUSTICIABLE, adj. [from justice.] Proper to be examined in courts of justice.

JUSTIFIABLE. adj. [from justify.] Defensible by law or reason.

Just are the ways of God,
And justifiable to men. Milton's Agonistes.

Although some animals in the water do carry a justifiable resemblance to some at land, yet are the major part which bear their names unlike. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

JUSTIFIABLENESS. n. s. [from justifiable.] Rectitude; possibility of being fairly defended.

Men, jealous of their darkest of their doings before God, never think they have human strength enough. King Charles.

JUSTIFIABLY. adv. [from justifiable.] Rightly; so as to be supported by right; defensibly.

A man may more justifiably throw cross and pile for his estate, than take them up by such measures. Locke.

JUSTIFICATION. n. s. [justification, Fr. justificatio, low Latin.]

1. Absolution.

I hope, for my brother's justification, he wrote this but as an essay of my virtue. Shakespeare.

2. Defence; maintenance; vindication; support.

Among theological arguments, in justification of absolute obedience, was one of a singular nature. Swift.

3. Deliverance by pardon from sins past. Clarke.

In such righteousness
To them by faith imputed, they may find
Justification towards God, and peace
Of conscience. Milton's Paradise Lost.

'Tis the consummation of that former act of faith by this latter, or, in the words of St. Paul and St. James, the consummation of faith by charity and good works, that God accepteth in Christ to justification, and not the bare aptness of faith to bring to the works, if those works, by the fault of a rebellious indisposition, will not be brought forth. Hammond.

JUSTIFICATOR. n. s. [from justify.] One who supports, defends, vindicates, or justifies.

JUSTIFIER. n. s. [from justify.] One who justifies; one who defends or absolves; one who frees from sin by pardon.

That he might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus. Rom. iii. 26.

To JUSTIFY. v. a. [justifier, French; justifico, low Latin.]

1. To clear from imputed guilt; to absolve from an accusation.

The law hath judged thee, Brutus;
I cannot justify whom law condemns. Shakespeare.

Thy say, behold all my slothfulness, a friend of publicans and sinners: but wisdom is justified of her children. Matt.

How can man be justified with God? or how can he be clean that is born of a woman? Job.

There is an exquisite subtilty, and the same is unjust; and there is a wise man that justifieth in judgment. Becon.

Sin may be forgiven through repentance, but no act or wit of man will ever justify them. Shallock.

You're neither justified, nor yet accus'd. Dryden.

2. To maintain; to defend; to vindicate.

When we began in courteous manner to lay his unkindness unto him, he being himself confronted by so many, like a resolute orator, went not to denial, but to justify his cruel falsehood. Sidney.

What he did, whatever in itself,
His doing seem'd to justify the deed. Milton.

My unwilling flight the gods inforce,
And that must justify our sad divorce. Dryden.

Yet still thy love shall stand in thy defence,
And justify their author's want of sense. Dryden.

Let others justify their millions as they can, we are sure we can justify that of our fathers by an uninterrupted succession. Atterbury.

3. To free from past sin by pardon.

By him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses. Acts.

To JUSTLE. v. n. [from just, jouster, Fr.] To encounter; to clash; to rush against each other.

While injury of chance
Puts back leave-taking, justles roughly by
All time and pause, rudely beguiles our lips
Of all rejoindure. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

The chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall justle one against another in the broad ways: Nah. ii. 4.

Argo past'd,
Through Bosphorus, betwixt the justling rocks. Milton.

Late the clouds
Justling, or push'd with winds, rude in their shock,
Tine the slant lightning. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Not one fiery spark,
But gods meet gods, and justle in the dark. Lee.

Courtiers therefore justle for a grant;
And, when they break their friendship, plead their want. Dryden.

The more remote ran stumbling with their feet,
And, in the dark, men justle as they meet. Dryd.

When elephant 'gainst elephant did rear
His trunk, and cattles justled in the air;
My sword thy way to victory had shown. Dryden.

Was there not one who had set bars and doors to it, and said, Hitherto shalt thou come, but no further, and here shall thy proud waves be stayed; then might we well expect such prejudices, such justlings and clashings in nature. Woodward.

I thought the dean had been too proud
To justle here among a crowd. Swift.

To JUSTLE. v. a. To push; to drive; to force by rushing against it. It is commonly used with a particle following, as out or off.

Private and single affairs should not be suffered to justle and deprive the church of the joint abilities of many learned and godly men. King Charles.

Many excellent strains have been justled off by their intrusions. Browne's Vulgar Errours.

The surly commons shall respect decay,
And justle peerage out with property. Dryden.

It is not to be imagined that the incongruous alphabets and abuses of writing can ever be justled out of their possession of all libraries. Holder.

Running in the dark, a man may justle a post. Collier.

Absent good, though thought on, not making any part of unhappiness in its absence, is justled out, to make way for the removal of those uneasinesses we feel. Locke.

We justled one another out, and disputed the post for a great while. Addison's Guardian.

JUSTLY. adv. [from just.]

1. Uprightly; honestly; in a just manner.

Nothing can justly be despised, that cannot justly be blamed: where there is no choice, there can be no blame. South.

With ignominy scourg'd in open sight:
Next view the Tarquin kings; th' avenging sword
Of Brutus justly drawn, and Rome restor'd. Dryd.

The goddess, studious of her Grecians' fate,
Taught them in laws and letters to excel,
In acting justly, and in writing well. Prior.

2. Properly; exactly; accurately.

Their artful hands instruct the lute to sound,
Their feet affect their hands, and justly beat the ground. Dryd.

JUSTNESS. n. s. [from just.]

1. Justice; reasonableness; equity. Justness is properly applied to things, and justice to persons; though we now say the justice of a cause, as well as of a judge.

It makes unto the right of the war against him, whose quarrel useth commonly to be according to the justness of the cause for which it is made. Spenser on Ireland.

We may not think the justness of each act
Such and no other than event doth form it Shakespeare.

2. Accuracy; exactness; propriety. In this sense it is now most used.

I value the satisfaction I had in seeing it represented with all the justness and gracefulness of action. Dryden.

I appeal to the people, was the usual saying of a very excellent dramatick poet, who use'd to dispute with particular persons about the justness and regularity of his productions. Addison.

To JUT. v. n. [This word is supposed to be corrupted from jet, perhaps from jf

To puſh or ſhoot into prominencies; to come out beyond the main bulk.

Inſulting tyranny begins to jut
Upon the innocent and awleſs throne. Shakeſpeare.

All the projected or jutting parts ſhould be very moderate, eſpecially the cornices of the lower orders. Wotton.

The land, if not reſtrain'd, had met your way,
Projected out a neck, and jutted to the ſea. Dryden.

Broke by the jutting land on either ſide;
In double ſtreams the briny waters glide. Dryden.

It ſeems to jut out of the ſtructure of the poem, and be independent of it. Broome.

To JUTTY. v. a. [from jut.] To ſhoot out beyond.

Then lend the eye a terrible aſpect;
Let it pry through the portage of the head
Like a braſs cannon: let the brow o'erwhelm it
As fearfully as doth a galled rock
O'erhang and jutty his confounded baſe,
Swill'd with the wild and waſteful ocean. Shakeſpeare.

JU'VENILE. adj. [juvenilis, Lat.] Young; youthful.

Learning hath its infancy when it is almoſt childiſh; then its youth, when it is luxuriant and juvenile; then its ſtrength of years, when it is ſolid; and laſtly, its old age, when it waxeth dry and exhauſt. Bacon's Eſſays.

JUVENI'LITY. n. ſ. [from juvenile.]

1. Youthfulneſs.

The reſtauration of grey hairs to juvenility, and renewing exhauſted marrow, may be effected without a miracle. Glanville.

This ſhall be call'd to morrow
Shakſpeare's Lover's Complaint

The gown, the coat, the ſhirt, the kirtle too,
They ſtrip the ſtarving, and the naked goe,
So that, to ſpeak a truth, of all mankind,
I ſcarce can find a bare inch but behind. Dryden

To KISS. v. a. [ceyſſan, Welſh; xuve.]

1. To touch with the lips.

But ſo much as I kiſs my own hand,
Which ſhould all a full ſhow of reſpect Stanley.

He took
The bowl between his hands, and kiſs'd the lips
Yet touch'd with that ſalubrious liquor, that at the parting
All the church echoed.
Shakeſpeare's Taming of the Shrew.

Then they were forced to ſeek out ſtalks,
And in the ſummer beauty kiſs'd each other
Shakeſpeare

2. In Scotland it denotes to pilfer, or ſteal away ſuddenly with a ſnatch.

To KNAB. v. a. [knappen, Dutch; knaap, Erſe.] To bite. Perhaps properly to bite ſomething brittle, that makes a noiſe when it is broken; ſo that knab and knap may be the ſame.

I had much rather be knabbing cruſts, without fear, in my own hut, than be maſters of the world with cares L'Eſtrange.

An ass never hungers in a hard Winter, for a little warm weather, and a mouthful of freſh graſs to knab upon L'Eſtrange.

To KNABBLE. v. n. [from knab.] To bite idly, or wantonly; to nibble. This word is found perhaps no where elſe.

Horſe will knabble at wall, and rat gnaw iron. Brown.

KNACK. n. ſ. [cnapinge, ſkill, Saxon.]

1. A little machine; a pretty contrivance; a toy.

When I was young, I was wont
To load my ſhe with knacks: I would have ranſack'd
The pedlar's ſilken treaſury, and have pour'd it
To her acceptance. Shakeſp. Winter's Tale.

For thee, fond boy,
If I may ever know thou doſt but ſigh
That thou no more ſhalt ſee this knack, as never
I mean thou ſhalt, we'll bar thee from ſucceſſion.
Shakeſpeare

This cup was moulded on a ponyard,
A ſword diſh; fie, fie, 'tis ſword baſtly:
Why 'tis a cockle or a walnut ſhell,
A knack, a toy, a trick, a very cup. Shakeſpeare

but let no perſon pity you, nor ſerve you,
Who make the better part of the two?
For I have ſeen them gentle, tame, and mild,
As ſucking babes, yet grow to be compoſe,
All wiſe, and pious, and juſt, and what not, when
Heavy ſorrow laſh his ſenſes,
And bind a wreath, with rings and ſtones and knacks;
A very corſe, with armour on,
Dreſs'd up fine, with other trinkets H. Johns

2. A readineſs, an habitual facility; a lucky dexterity.

I'll teach you the knacks
Of riding, ſtanding,
And of all demeanours that
Do riſe a handſome man. Ben Jonſon's Gipſies.

The knack of trifling has paſſed into a proverb, as the moſt ſignificant addreſs. L'Eſtrange.

Knack, who in full encumbrance ſwells the knack
Of turning truth to lies, and white to black. Dryden.

My wife has a great knack of making pies in the end we make another about our ſervice in controverſy, and ſwearing as true and ſtanch to the church of Rome. Atterbury.

The Dean was famous to his time,
And had the knack to rhyme. Swift.

3. A nice trick.

For how ſhould I get above the knack
Camelions who can paint in white and black? Pope.

KNA'PSACK. n. ſ. [from knappen, to eat.] The bag which a ſoldier carries on his back: a bag of proviſions.

The conſtitutions of this church ſhall not be repined, 'till I ſee more religious motives than ſoldiers carry in their knapſacks. King Charles.

If you go for a merry jaunt, I'll try for once who can foot it fartheſt: there are hedges in Summer, and barns in Winter: I with my knapſack, and you with your bottle at your back: we'll leave honour to madmen, and rule to ſlaves, and travel till we come to the ridge of the world. Dryden.

KNA'PWEED. n. ſ. [jacea, Latin.] A plant. Miller.

KNARE. n. ſ. [knor, German.] A hard knot.

A cake of ſcurf lies baking on the ground,
And prickly ſtalks inſtead of trees are found;
Or woods with knots and knares deform'd and old,
Headleſs the moſt, and hideous to behold. Dryden.

KNAVE. n. ſ. [cnapa, Saxon.]

1. A boy; a male child.

2. A ſervant. Both theſe are obſolete.

For as the moon the eve doth pierce
With gentle beams not hurting ſight,
Yet hath ſo fair the greater praiſe,
Becauſe from him doth come her light;
So for a man muſt praiſes have,
Who when need I that keep the knave. Sidney.

He eats and drinks with his domeſtick ſlaves,
A ſeverer hind than any of his knaves. Dryden.

3. A petty raſcal; a ſcoundrel, a diſhoneſt fellow.

Moſt men rather brook their being reputed knaves, than for their honeſty be accounted fools; knaves, in the mean time, paſſing for a name of credit. South.

When both plaintiff and defendant happen to be of my knaves, there's ejectment againſt both L'Eſtrange.

An honeſt man may take a knave's advice,
But not only may be cozen'd twice Dryden

See what it is to be knaves Pope.

4. A card with a ſoldier painted on it.

For ſtill reverſe, and turn the account,
In vain we are brought in play upon't,
Or both of us game knaves at laſt,
What power can hinder us from it? Hudibras.

KNA'VERY. n. ſ. [from knave.]

1. Diſhoneſty; tricks; petty villainy.

Here's no knavery! See to beguile the old folks, how the young folks lay their heads together. Shakeſpeare.

If I thought it were not a piece of honeſty to acquaint the king withal, I would do it, I hold it the more knavery to conceal it. Shakeſp. Winter's Tale.

The cunning courtier ſhould be ſlighted too,
Who with dull knavery makes ſo much ado;
'Till the ſhrewd fool by thriving too too faſt,
Like Æſop's fox becomes a prey at laſt. Dryden.

2. Miſchievous tricks or practices. In the following paſſage it ſeems a general term for any thing put to an ill uſe, or perhaps of trifling things of more coſt and uſe.

We'll reveal it as bravely as the beſt,
With amber bracelets, beads, and all this knavery. Shakeſpeare.

KNA'VISH. adj. [from knave.]

1. Diſhoneſt; wicked; fraudulent.

'Tis fooliſh to conceal it at all, and knaviſh to do it from friends. Pope's Letters.

2. Waggiſh; miſchievous.

Here ſhe comes curſt and ſad;
Cupid is a knaviſh lad,
Thus to make poor females mad. Shakeſp.

KNA'VISHLY. adv. [from knaviſh.]

1. Diſhoneſtly: fraudulently.

2. Waggiſhly; miſchievouſly.

To KNEAD. v. a. [cnæban, Saxon; kneden, Dutch.] To beat or mingle any ſtuff or ſubſtance. It is ſeldom applied in popular language but to the act of making bread.

Here's yet in the word hereafter, the kneading, the making of the cakes, and the heating of the oven. Shakeſp.

It is a lump, where all beaſts kneaded be,
Wiſdom makes him an ark, where all agree. Donne.

Thus kneaded up with milk the new made man
His kingdom o'er his kindred world began,
'Till knowledge miſapply'd miſunderſtood,
And pride of empire, ſour'd his balmy blood.
Dryden.

One paſte of fleſh on all degrees beſtow'd,
And kneaded up alike with moiſt'ning blood. Dryden.

Prometheus, in the kneading up of the heart, ſeaſoned it with ſome furious particles of the lion. Addiſon's Spectator.

No man ever reapt his corn,
Or from the oven drew his bread,
Ere hinds and bakers yet were born,
That taught them both to ſow and knead. Prior.

The cake ſhe kneaded was the lay'ty meat. Prior.

KNE'ADINGTROUGH. n. ſ. [knead and trough.] A trough in which the paſte of bread is worked together.

Frogs ſhall come into thy kneadingtroughs. Exodus.

KNEE. n. ſ. [cneop, Saxon, knee, Dutch.]

1. The joint of the leg where the leg is joined to the thigh.

Thy royal father
Was a moſt famiſhed king: the queen that bore thee,
Oftener upon her knees than on her feet,
Died every day he liv'd. Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

Scotch ſkink is a kind of ſtrong nouriſhment, made of the knees and ſinews of beef long boiled. Bacon.

I beg and claſp thy knees. Milton.

Wearied with length of ways, worn out with toil,
I lay down and leaning on her knees,
Implor'd the cauſe of all her miſeries;
And caſt her languiſhing regards above,
For help from Heav'n, and her ungrateful Jove.
Dryden.

2. A knee is a piece of timber growing crooked, and ſo cut that the trunk and branch make up an angle. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

Such diſpoſitions are the fitteſt timber to make great politicks of: like to knee timber, that is good for ſhips that are to be toſſed; but not for building houſes, that ſhall ſtand firm. Bacon.

To KNEE. v. a. [from the noun.] To ſupplicate by kneeling.

Go you that baniſh'd him, a mile before his tent fall down, and knee the way into his mercy. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.

Return with her!
Why, the hot blooded France, that dow'reſs took
Our youngeſt born: I could as well be brought To knee his throne, and ſquire-like penſion beg. Shakeſp.

KNEED. adj. [from knee.]

1. Having knees: as in-kneed, or out-kneed.

2. Having joints: as kneed graſs.

KNE'LDEEP. adj. [knee and deep.]

1. Riſing to the knees.

2. Sunk to the knees.

The country peaſant meditates no harm,
When clad with ſkins of beaſts, to keep him warm;
In winter weather unconcern'd he goes,
Almoſt kneedeep, through mire in clumſy ſhoes.
Dryden.

KNE'EDGRASS. n. ſ. [gramen genticulatum.] An herb.

KNE'EHOLM. n. ſ. [aquifolium.] An herb Ainſworth.

KNE'EPAN. n. ſ. [knee and pan.] A little round bone about two inches broad, pretty thick, a little convex on both ſides, and covered with a ſmooth cartilage on its foreſide. It is ſoft in children, but very hard in thoſe of riper years: it is called patella or mola. Over it paſſes the tendon of the muſcles which extend the leg, to which it ſerves as a pully. Quincy.

The kneepan muſt be ſhewn, with the knitting thereof, by a fine ſhadow underneath the joint Peacham on Drawing.

To KNEEL. v. n. [from knee.] To perform the act of genuflection; to bend the knee.

When thou do'ſt aſk me bleſſing, I'll kneel down,
And aſk of thee forgiveneſs. Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

Ere I was risen from the place that ſhew'd
My duty kneeling, came a reeking poſt,
Stew'd in his haſte, half breathing, panting forth
From Goneril, his miſtreſs, ſalutation. Shakeſpeare.

A certain man kneeling down to him, ſaid, Lord, have mercy upon my ſon; for he is lunatick. Matt. xvii. 14.

As ſoon as you are dreſſed, kneel and ſay the Lord's prayer. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

KNE'ETRIBUTE. n. ſ. [knee and tribute.] Genuflection; worſhip or obeiſance ſhown by kneeling.

Receive from us
Kneetribute yet unpaid, proſtration vile. Milton.

KNEL. n. ſ. [cnyll, Welſh, a funeral pile; cnyllan, to ring, Sax.] The ſound of a bell rung at a funeral.

I would not wiſh them to a fairer death,
And ſo his knell is knoll'd. Shakeſp.

Sea nymphs hourly ring his knell:
Hark, now I hear them. Shakeſp. Tempeſt.

When he was brought again to th' bar, to hear
His knell rung out, his judgement, he was ſtirr'd
With ſuch an agony, he ſweat extremely. Shakeſpeare.

All theſe motions, which we ſaw,
Are but as ice, which crackles at a thaw:
Or as a lute, which in moiſt weather rings
Her knell alone, by cracking of her ſtrings. Donne.

Unhappy ſlave, and pupil to a bell,
Which his hours work, as hours do tell;
Unhappy 'till the laſt, the kind releaſing knell.
Cowley.

At dawn poor Stella danc'd and ſung;
The am'rous youth around her bow'd:
At night her fatal knell was rung,
I ſaw, and kiſs'd her in her ſhrowd. Prior.

KNEW. The preterite of know.

KNIFE. n. ſ. plur. knives. [cnif, Saxon; kniff, Daniſh.] An inſtrument edged and pointed, wherewith meat is cut, and animals killed.

Come, thick night,
And pall thee in the dunneſt ſmoke of hell,
That my keen knife ſee not the wound it makes.
Shakeſpeare.

Bleſt powers, forbid thy tender life
Should bleed upon a barbarous knife. Crashaw
The ſacred prieſts with ready knives bereave
The beaſt of life, and in full bowls receive
The ſtreaming blood. Dryden's Æn.
Ev'n in his ſleep he ſtarts, and fears the knife,
And, trembling, in his arms takes his accomplice wife. Dryden
Pain is not in the knife that cuts us, but we call it cutting in the knife, and pain only in ourſelves.
Watts

KNIGHT. n. ſ. [cnihr, Sax. knecht, Germ. a ſervant or pupil.]

1. A man advanced to a certain degree of military rank. It was anciently the cuſtom to knight every man of rank or fortune, that he might be qualified to give challenges, to fight in the liſts, and to perform feats of arms. In England knighthood confers the title of ſir. as, ſir Thomas, ſir Richard. When the name was not known, it was uſual to ſay ſir knight.

That ſame knight, own ſword this is of yore,
Which Merlin made. Spenſer
Sir knight, if knight thou be,
Abandon this foreſtalled place. Spenſer
When every cauſe in law is right,
No ſquire in debt, and no poor knight.
Shakeſp. King Lear
This knight, but yet why ſhould I call him knight,
To give impiety to this rev'rent ſtile? Daniel
No ſquire with knight did better fit
In parts, in manners, and in wit. Hudibras

2. Shakeſpeare uſes it of a female, and it muſt therefore be underſtood in its original meaning, pupil or follower.

Pardon, goddeſs of the night,
Thoſe that ſlew thy virgin knight;
For the which, with ſongs of woe,
Round about her tomb they go. Shakeſpeare.

3. A champion.

He ſuddenly unties the poke,
Which out of it ſent ſuch a ſmoke,
As ready was them all to choke,
So grievous was the pother;
So that the knights each other loſt,
And ſtood as ſtill as any poſt. Drayton.
Did I for this my country bring
To help their knight againſt their king,
And raiſe the firſt ſedition? Denham.

KNIGHT Errant. [chevalier errant.] A wandering knight; one who went about in queſt of adventures.

Like a bold knight errant did proclaim
Combat to all, and bore away the dame. Denham.
The ancient errant knights
Won all their miſtreſſes in fights;
They cut whole giants into fritters,
To put them into am'rous twitters. Hudibras.

KNIGHT Errantry. [from knight errant.] The character or manners of wandering knights.

That which with the vulgar paſſes for courage is a bruiſh ſort of knight errantry, ſeeking out needleſs encounters. Norris.

KNIGHT of the Poſt. A hireling evidence; a knight dubbed at the whipping poſt, or pillory.

There are knights of the poſt, and holy cheats enough, to ſwear the truth of the broadeſt contradictions, where pious frauds ſhall give them an extraordinary call. South

KNIGHTS of the Shire. One of the repreſentatives of a county in parliament: he formerly was a military knight, but now any man having an eſtate in land of ſix hundred pounds a-year is qualified.

To KNIGHT. v. a. [from the noun.] To create one a knight, which is done by the king, who gives the perſon kneeling a blow with a ſword, and bids him riſe up ſir.

Favours came thick upon him: the next St. George's day he was knighted Wotton
The lord protector knighted the king; and immediately the king ſtood up, took the ſword from the lord protector, and dubbed the lord mayor of London knight Hayward.
The hero William, and the martyr Charles
One knighted Blackmore, and one penſion'd Quarles
Pope

KNI'GHTLY. adv. [from knight.] Befitting a knight; beſeeming a knight.

Let us take care of your wound, upon condition that a more knightly combat ſhall be performed between us Sidney.
How dares your pride preſume againſt my laws
As in a hired head to fight your cauſe:
Unlaw'd the royal grant, no marſhal by,
As knightly rites require, nor judge to try Dryden.

KNI'GHTHOOD. n. ſ. [from knight.] The character or dignity of a knight.

The ſword which Merlin made,
For that his nourthling, when he knighthood ſwore,
Therewith to doen his foes eternal ſmart.
Fairy Queen
Speak truly on thy knighthood, and thine oath,
And ſo defend thee Heaven and thy valour
Shakeſpeare.
Is this the ſir, who ſome waſte wife to win,
A knighthood bought, to go a-wooing in? Ben Jonſ.
If you needs muſt write, write Cæſar's praiſe,
You'll gain at leaſt a knighthood or the bays. Pope

KNI'GHTLESS. adj. [from knight.] Unbecoming a knight. Obſolete.

Ariſe, thou curſed miſcreant.
That haſt with knightleſs guile, and treacherous train,
Fair knighthood foully ſhamed. Fairy Queen.

To KNIT. v. a. preter. knit or knitted [cnittan, Saxon]

1. To make or unite by texture, without a loom.

Sleep, that knits up the ravell'd ſleeve of care,
The birth of each day's life, ſore labour's bath,
Balm of hurt minds. Shakeſp. Macbeth.
A thouſand Cupids in thoſe curls do ſit;
Thoſe curious nets thy ſlender fingers knit Waller

2. To tye.

Send for the county; go tell him of this;
I'll have this knot knit up to-morrow morning.
Shakeſpeare.
